The CONTENTS.

SER. CCIV. CCV. CCVI. Of the form and the power of godliness. 2 Tim. iii. 3. Having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof pag. 1. 18. 29

SER. CCVII. CCVIII. CCIX. Of the necessity of good works. Tit. iii. 8. This is a faithful saying, and these things I will that thou affirm constantly, that they which have believed in God, might be careful to maintain good works. These things are good and profitable unto men 39. 59. 70

SER. CCX. Of doing all to the glory of God. 1 Cor. x. 31. Whether therefore ye eat or drink, or whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God 79

SER. CCXI. Doing good, a security against injuries from men. 1 Pet. iii. 13. And who is he that will harm you, if ye be followers of that which is good 92

SER. CCXII. Of diligence in our general and particular calling. Eccl. ix. 10. Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might; for there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom in the grave, whither thou goest 103

SER. CCXIII. Of the blessedness of giving, more than that of receiving. Acts xx. 35. The latter part of the verse: And to remember the words of the Lord Jesus, how he said, It is more blessed to give than to receive. The whole verse runs thus: I have shewed you all things, how that so labouring, ye ought to support the weak, and to remember the words of the Lord Jesus, how he said, It is more blessed to give, than to receive 118

SER. CCXIV. The evil of corrupt communication. Eph. iv. 29. Let no corrupt communication proceed out of your mouth; but that which is good to the use of edifying, that it may minister grace to the hearers 130

SER. CCXV. CCXVI. CCXVII. CXVIII. The true remedy against the troubles of life. John xiv. 1. Let not your heart be troubled: ye believe in God, believe also in me 146. 157. 168. 179

SER. CCXIX. CCXX. CCXXI. CCXXII. CCXXIII. CCXXIV. Of the nature of faith in general. Of a religious and divine faith. Of the faith or perſuaſion of a divine revelation. Of the teſtimony of the Spirit to the truth of the goſpel. The efficacy, uſefulneſs, and reaſonableneſs of divine faith. Heb. xi. 6. But without faith it is impoſſible to pleaſe God. 190. 203. 218. 229. 243. 255

SER. CCXXV. CCXXVI. CCXXVII. CCXXVIII. Of the Chriſtian faith, the means of its conveyance, and our obligation to receive it. Of the Chriſtian faith, which ſanctifies, juſtifies, and ſaves. Of juſtifying faith. The condition of the goſpel covenant, and the merit of Chriſt, conſiſtent. John xx. 31. But theſe are written, that ye might believe that Jeſus is the Chriſt the Son of God, and that believing ye might have life through his name 272. 284, 297. 309

SER. CCXXIX. CCXXX. CCXXXI. Of the miracles wrought in confirmation of Chriſtianity. Heb. ii. 4. God alſo bearing them witneſs, both with ſigns and wonders, and with divers miracles, and gifts of the Holy Ghoſt, according to his own will 323. 342. 354

SER. CCXXXII. CCXXXIII. The advantages of truth in oppoſition to error. 1 John iv. 4. 5. Ye are of God, litle children, and have overcome them: becauſe greater is he that is in you, than he that is in the world. They are of the world: therefore ſpeak they of the world, and the world heareth them 365. 376

SER. CCXXXIV. CCXXXV. CCXXXVI. The evidences of the truth of the Chriſtian religion; with the cauſe, and the danger of infidelity. 2 Cor. iv. 3. 4. But if our goſpel be hid, it is hid to them that are loſt: in whom the god of this world hath blinded the minds of them which believe not, leſt the light of the glorious goſpel of Chriſt, who is the image of God, ſhould ſhine unto them 386. 396. 408

SERMON CCIV.

Of the form, and the power of godlineſs.

2 TIM. iii. 5.

Having a form of godlineſs, but denying the power thereof.

The firſt ſermon on this text.

THE Apoſtle, in theſe words, diſtinguiſhes two things in religion, which do not, but ought always to go together, viz. the ſhew and pretence of religion, and the life and power of it. He condemns neither, but blames the ſeparating of them. The latter, indeed, cannot be without the firſt; for wherever religion really is, there will be ſome appearance of it: but the former may be, and often is, without the latter. Men may make a great ſhew of religion, and yet be very deſtitute of the power of it. And ſuch were thoſe perſons the Apoſtle deſcribes here in the text; they were guilty of the greateſt faults and vices in their lives, but thought to cloke all theſe by an outward ſhew and appearance of godlineſs: Having a form of godlineſs, but denying the power thereof.

The word μόρφωσις, which is here tranſlated form, ſignifies the ſhew or image of a thing, which is dead and ineffectual, in oppoſition to the reality and life, which is quick and powerful. And, I think, this word is but once more uſed in the New Teſtament, and much in the ſame ſenſe, viz. for an empty and ineffectual knowledge of religion, without the practice of it, Rom. ii. 17, 20, 21. The Apoſtle there ſpeaks of ſome Phariſaical Jews, who gloried in their knowledge of the law, but violated it in their practice. Behold, thou art called a Jew, and reſteſt in the law, and haſt the form of knowledge, and of the truth in the law. Thou therefore that teacheſt another, teacheſt thou not thyſelf? Thou that preacheſt, a man ſhould not ſteal, doſt thou ſteal?

So that a form of godlineſs ſignifies an empty ſhew and profeſſion of religion, without the real effects of it.

And they who are deſtitute of theſe, are ſaid to deny the power of religion. It is uſual, in ſeveral languages, to draw metaphors from words to actions; and men are ſaid to contradict or deny any thing, when they do contrary to what they pretend; and ſo this phraſe is elſewhere uſed. Tit. i. 10. They profeſs to know God, but in their works they deny him. 1 Tim. v. 8. If any man provide not for his own, eſpecially for thoſe of his own houſe, he hath denied the faith. The Apoſtle does not mean that ſuch an one denies the faith by an expreſs declaration in words, but by actions ſo contradictory to the Chriſtian faith, as an infidel would hardly do: He hath denied the faith, and is worſe than an infidel.

In the handling of theſe words, I ſhall do theſe four things.

Firſt, Shew wherein a form of godlineſs conſiſts.

Secondly, Wherein the power of it lies.

Thirdly, Give ſome marks and characters whereby we may know when theſe are ſeparated, when the form of godlineſs is deſtitute of the power.

Fourthly, Shew that a mere form of godlineſs, without the power of it, is inſignificant to all the great ends and purpoſes of religion.

Firſt, To ſhew wherein a form of godlineſs doth conſiſt. In general, it conſiſts in an external ſhew and profeſſion of religion, or of any eminent part of it, or of that which is reputed to be ſo; and a form of religion is more or leſs complete, according to the extent of it. Some pitch upon one part of religion, and ſet themſelves chiefly to make a ſhew of that; others take in more parts of it, and endeavour to expreſs and counterfeit them; ſo that the forms of religion are various and different, and not to be reduced to any fixed and conſtant ſtandard; but they commonly appear in ſome one or more of theſe ſhapes.

I. An external devotion.
II. An orthodox profeſſion of the Chriſtian faith.
III. Enthuſiaſm, and pretence to inſpiration.
IV. A great external ſhew of mortification.

V. An

V. An imperfect repentance, and partial reformation.

VI. The appearance and oſtentation of ſome particular grace and virtue.

VII. A great zeal for ſome party, or opinions, or circumſtances of religion.

VIII. Sillineſs and freakiſhneſs, and either a pretended or real ignorance in the common affairs and concernments of human life.

IX. Much noiſe and talk about religion.

Theſe are the ſeveral forms of religion which men are wont to aſſume. Not that theſe do always go ſingly; but ſometimes men put on one, ſometimes more of them, as may beſt ſerve their ſeveral turns and intereſts. Nor would I be underſtood to condemn all theſe; for ſeveral of theſe particulars which I have mentioned are good in themſelves, and neceſſary parts of religion; but being deſtitute of other things, wherein the life of religion doth conſiſt, they are but a form of godlineſs.

I. External devotion. This is the moſt common form of religion, and eaſieſt to be aſſumed, and therefore it is that ſo many take it up. And this is good in itſelf, and a neceſſary part of religion: but if there be no more than this, it is a mere image and picture of religion, abominable to God, and fulſome and odious to diſcerning men.

Now, this external devotion ſhews itſelf more eſpecially theſe two ways.

1. In a frequent and diligent uſe of the means and inſtruments of religion.

2. In a curious and nice regard to the modes and circumſtances of performing theſe.

1. In a frequent and diligent uſe of the means and inſtruments of religion, ſuch as prayer, reading, and hearing the word of God, and receiving of the bleſſed ſacrament. Theſe are not the life of religion, the great end and deſign of it, but the means and inſtruments which God hath appointed for the begetting and increaſing of holineſs and virtue in us. Many exerciſe themſelves in theſe with great conſtancy and devotion, pray to God, and read the Bible frequently, go to church duly, and hear God's word attentively, and receive the ſacrament reverently, reverently, and behave themſelves devoutly in all parts of publick worſhip; and yet all this may be but a mere form, and certainly is no more, where the great end of all this is neglected, and men do not ſincerely endeavour to do what God's word directs them to, and what they daily pray to God to enable them to do.

For all theſe means are in order to ſome farther effect and deſign. We read and hear the word of God, that we may know his will, and that we may do it; that, by the precepts and counſels of the holy ſcriptures, we may learn and underſtand our duty; and, by the motives and arguments which are there offered to us, we may effectually be perſuaded to the practice of it. We pray to God, not only for the forgiveneſs of our ſins, but for his grace and aſſiſtance, to enable us to mortify and ſubdue them, and to proceed in all virtue and godlineſs of living. We receive the ſacrament, to inflame our love to God and our bleſſed Saviour, to excite in us a greater hatred of ſin, and to confirm us in the purpoſe and reſolution of well-doing. Theſe are the great ends for which God hath appointed all theſe helps and means; and if theſe ends be not obtained, in vain do we worſhip God, all our religion is but mere ſhew and pageantry. We are but like the people God himſelf deſcribes, Iſ. xxix. 13. This people draw near me with their mouth, and with their lips do they honour me, but have removed their heart far from me. And like thoſe, Ezek. xxxiii. 30, 31, 32. who ſpake one to another, every one to his brother, ſaying, Come, I pray you, and hear what is the word that cometh forth from the Lord. And they come unto thee as the people cometh, and they ſit before thee as my people, and they hear thy words, but they will not do them: for with their mouths they ſhew much love, but their heart goeth after their covetouſneſs. And lo, thou art unto them as a very lovely ſong, of one that hath a pleaſant voice, and can play well on an inſtrument: for they hear thy words but they do them not. This is not to worſhip God, but impudently to affront him; and if we take this for religion, we put the groſſeſt cheat imaginable upon ourſelves. Hear how God challenges the people of Iſrael upon this account, Jer. vii. 2, 3, 4, &c. Hear the word of the Lord, all ye of Judah, that that enter in at these gates to worship the Lord. Thus saith the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel, Amend your ways and your doings, and I will cause you to dwell in this place. This is the great end of all religious worship and devotion, the reformation of our lives and actions; and if it have not this effect, it is a cheat. Trust ye not in lying words, saying, The temple of the Lord, the temple of the Lord, the temple of the Lord are these. For if ye thoroughly amend your ways, and your doings; if ye thoroughly execute judgment between a man and his neighbour; if ye oppress not the stranger, the fatherless, and the widow, and shed not innocent blood in this place, neither walk after other gods to your hurt; then will I cause you to dwell in this place, in the land that I gave to your fathers for ever and ever. Behold, ye trust in lying words that cannot profit. Will ye steal, murder, and commit adultery, and swear falsely, and burn incense unto Baal, and walk after other gods, whom ye know not: and come and stand before me in this house, which is called by my name, and say, We are delivered to do all these abominations? What greater impudence can there be, than to worship God devoutly, and to live wickedly? This is to declare that we mock God under a pretence of serving him; or else that we believe that God, whom we worship, allows these abominations, and is pleased with them.

2. Others make this form of external devotion yet more complete, by a curious and nice regard to the modes and circumstances of performing the duties of religion. They are very punctual and exact in all their carriage and gestures, as if they minded nothing else but the outward part of religion.

Not but that great humility and reverence does very well become men in their addresses to God; but then we must be sure, that this external reverence be a signification of the inward and real devotion of our minds. For if it be separated from this, it is not devotion, but superstition; it is not to worship God in spirit and in truth, but in bodily shew and appearance only; not to honour the divine Majesty, but to fawn upon him, and flatter him. And where men are very intent upon these things, and endeavour to outſtrip other people in voluntary expreſſions of outward devotion, it too often happens that ſuch perſons are deſtitute of the ſubſtance and reality of religion. They are like the formal complimenting ſort of people in civil converſation, who, commonly, have very little in them, and, notwithſtanding all their ſmooth outſide and appearance, they have neither that ſolidity nor ſincerity which is in many a plain ordinary man.

II. An orthodox profeſſion of the Chriſtian faith. This is another form of religion, which the more knowing and inquiſitive ſort of men are apt to take up and reſt in. And this is that which, in the Jewiſh religion, the Apoſtle calls a form of knowledge, and of the truth in the law.

And this is good as far as it goes. But then it muſt not reſt only in the brain, but deſcend from thence upon the heart and life: otherwiſe a man may have this form of godlineſs, and yet be a denier of the power of it. St Paul puts this very caſe, that a man may have the theory and knowledge of religion, and yet if it do not produce the fruits of a good life, it is nothing worth: 1 Cor. xiii. 2. Though I have the gift of prophecy, and underſtand all myſteries, and all knowledge; and though I have all faith, ſo that I could remove mountains, and have no charity, I am nothing. And the reaſon is plain, becauſe the knowledge of religion is only in order to the practice of it; and an article or propoſition of faith is an idle thing, if it do not produce ſuch actions as the belief of ſuch a propoſition doth require.

There are many perſons in the world very ſolicitous about an orthodox belief, and mightily concerned to know what the ſcriptures, but eſpecially what the councils and fathers have declared in ſuch a matter; and they are nice and ſcrupulous in theſe things, even to the utmoſt punctilios, and will, with a moſt unchriſtian paſſion, contend for the Chriſtian faith: and yet, perhaps, all this while they can allow themſelves in plain ſins, and in the practice of ſuch things as are in ſcripture as clearly forbidden to be done, as any thing is there commanded to be believed. Whereas religion does not conſiſt ſo much in nicety and ſubtilty of belief, as in integrity and innocency of life; and the trueſt and moſt orthodox perſuaſion in matters of religion, ligion, is but a mere form and image, if it be not accompanied with an answerable practice; yea, like the image represented to Nebuchadnezzar in his dream, whose head was of fine gold, but the legs and feet were iron and clay.

Not but that a right belief is of great concernment in religion; but then this belief must be prosecuted into the proper and genuine consequences of it, upon our lives: if it be not, it is unhappy for men that they believe so well, when they live so ill. The devils have a right faith, St James tells us, they believe and tremble. And, indeed, none have so much reason to tremble, as those who believe the principles of religion, and yet are conscious to themselves that they live contrary to them; because, of all persons in the world, they are the most inexcusable.

III. Another form of religion which many take upon them, is enthusiasm, and pretence to inspiration. And this is a very glorious form, which is apt to dazzle and amuse the ignorant, because they know not what to make of it. It seems to be something strange and extraordinary, and yet it is nothing but what every man that has confidence enough may pretend to.

There is no Christian doubts but that the Spirit of God hath heretofore inspired men in an extraordinary manner, and that he may do so again when he pleases: but since the great and standing revelation of the gospel, we have reason not to be rash in giving heed to such pretences. If those who pretend to inspiration declare nothing but what is revealed in the gospel already, their inspiration is needless; if they declare any thing contrary thereto, we are sufficiently cautioned against them; if any thing besides the revelation of the gospel, but not contrary to it, then we are to expect what evidence they bring for their inspiration. For God does not inspire men for their own sakes, but for the sake of others; and another man's inspiration is nothing to me, unless he can satisfy me that he is inspired. For either I must believe every one that pretends to inspiration, or those only that can make good their pretence. Not every one, for then I yield up myself to the mercy of every confident man, to lead me into what delusions he pleases. If I believe only those who are able to make good this pretence, then am I

in no great danger; for nothing leſs than a miracle can give me reaſonable aſſurance of another man's inſpiration; and, I think, few or none of our modern enthuſiaſts have ſo much as pretended to miracles. So that this form of religion is calculated only to impoſe upon the ignorant, but ſignifies little among the ſteady and conſiderate ſort of people.

Nay, if this pretence were real, yet it may be no more than a form of religion. For the Apoſtle ſuppoſes that men may have the gift of prophecy, and yet want charity, without which they are nothing. And our Saviour tells us, that many ſhall plead at the day of judgment, Have we not propheſied in thy name, and in thy name caſt out devils, and in thy name done many wonderful works? And yet theſe very perſons, for all this, may be workers of iniquity, and ſuch as our Lord will bid to depart from him.

IV. A great external ſhew of mortification.

This the Phariſees of old did much applaud themſelves in; they faſted twice a-week. And this is ſtill a great part of the religion of many in the Romiſh church; they impoſe ſtrict penalties and corporal ſeverities upon themſelves; abſtain from ſeveral ſorts of meats and drinks, watch and afflict their bodies with ſeveral ſorts of rigours: whereas one ſevere reſolution of a good life, well proſecuted, is a thouſand times better than all this.

For experience ſhews us, that men may be very ſevere to their bodies, and yet favourable to their luſts. The Phariſees indeed faſted often, but they were very ravenous in another kind, they devoured widows houſes. It is poſſible that men may kill themſelves by corporal auſterities, and yet never mortify one luſt; they may ſubmit to a thouſand penances, and yet never truly repent of one ſin; they may turn pilgrims, and go as far as Jeruſalem to viſit our Saviour's ſepulchre, and yet never know the power of his death.

Faſting may be a good inſtrument of religion, if it be diſcreetly uſed; and as it may be uſed, there may be no religion in it. But as for thoſe other kinds of ſeverities, they are abſurd and ſuperſtitious, and taken up upon a great miſtake of the nature of God; as if he were never

well pleaſed, but when we do ſomething very diſpleaſing to ourſelves; as if he were extremely delighted in the miſery and torment of his creatures; and to be cruel and unmerciful to ourſelves, were the only way to move his compaſſion towards us.

Theſe are barbarous and heatheniſh conceits of God; and the abſurd practices grounded upon them are no where recommended to us in ſcripture, nor have any example there, but only in Baal's prieſts, who lanced and cut themſelves, believing that to be a good way to incline their gods to hear them. Theſe are voluntary ſuperſtitions, which God hath required at no man's hands. And no wiſe man can doubt, but that he that really mortifies his luſts, and ſubdues his paſſions, may be a good man, though he never whipped himſelf in all his life; and that he that lives ſoberly, and righteouſly, and godly, may juſtly be accounted religious, without turning vagrant, and rambling idly up and down the world. Theſe are ſuch forms of religion as can have no eſteem and reputation, but in a very ſuperſtitious church and age.

V. An imperfect repentance, and partial reformation.

By an imperfect repentance, I mean a trouble and ſorrow for ſin, without the forſaking of it, and the amendment of our lives; or when, if men do reform in ſome things, they continue in the love and practice of other ſins. This is not true repentance; for he that hath truly repented, is heartily troubled for all his offences againſt God, and reſolved not to commit the like again; but he that retains any luſt, and allows himſelf in the practice of it, is not troubled that he hath offended God, but hath left his ſins for ſome other reaſon. For whatever arguments and conſiderations, reſpecting God, will move a man to quit any one luſt, ought, upon the ſame account, to prevail with him to abandon all. So that, whatever trouble and ſorrow a man may pretend for his ſins, there is no ſurer ſign of an inſincere repentance, than if, after this, he continue in the habitual practice of any known ſin.

VI. The appearance and oſtentation of ſome particular grace and virtue.

A man may be moved by the inclination of his nature, or upon ſome intereſt and deſign, to the practice of ſome particular virtue. Some are tender and compaſſionate in their nature, and that excites them to charity; others of quiet and eaſy diſpoſitions, and that makes them patient, and meek, and peaceable; others aſſume one or more virtuous qualities, out of vain-glory, or to ſerve ſome other intereſt. The Phariſees were much in giving alms, becauſe this is a piece of religion univerſally applauded and well ſpoken of; and therefore, though they omitted many other neceſſary parts of religion, yet they were ſo cunning that they would not be defective in this; not out of regard to God, but themſelves and their own reputation. For, as our Saviour obſerves, they did their alms with ſuch circumſtances of vain-glory, as quite blaſted the glory of them. They cauſed a trumpet to be ſounded before them in the ſynagogues, and in the ſtreets, that they might be ſeen of men, and have glory of them.

Now, though the exerciſe of every grace and virtue be materially a ſubſtantial part of religion, yet the practice of one virtue, with the neglect of others, is a ſhrewd ground of ſuſpicion, that it is not virtue but deſign, that it is not religion but intereſt which prompts men to it. For if it were religion, and done with regard to God, the very ſame reaſon would oblige them to all other parts of their duty as well as that.

VII. A great zeal for ſome particular party, or opinions, or circumſtances of religion.

This form is frequently aſſumed, becauſe men find the greateſt ſhelter and protection under it. He that declares zealouſly for a party or opinion, and is fierce and eager againſt thoſe that oppoſe it, ſeldom fails to gain the reputation of a religious and godly man; becauſe he hath the vote of the whole party, and a great number to cry him up. And if he be guilty of any miſcarriage, unleſs it be very groſs and viſible, he ſhall never want thoſe that will apologize for him, and be ready to vindicate him at all turns. Either they will not believe what is reported of him, but impute it to malice; or they will extenuate it, and aſcribe it to human infirmity: but ſtill they cannot but think he is a religious man, becauſe he is ſo zealous for that which they eſteem to be ſo conſiderable a part of religion. Nay, ſuch is the horrible partiality and injuſtice of parties, that a very bad man that appears zealous for their way, ſhall eaſily gain the eſteem of a holy and religious man, though he have many viſible and notorious faults; though he be paſſionate and ill-natured, cenſorious and uncharitable, cruel and oppreſſive, ſordid and covetous; when another, who quietly, and without any noiſe and buſtle, minds the ſubſtantial parts of religion, and is truly devout towards God, juſt and peaceable, and charitable towards men; meek and humble, and patient, kind and friendly even to thoſe that differ from him, ſhall hardly eſcape being cenſured for a lukewarm, formal, moral man, deſtitute of the grace of God and the power of godlineſs.

So likewiſe zeal for or againſt indifferent circumſtances of religion, is another form of godlineſs which many appear in. And commonly ſuch perſons, the more deſtitute they are of true piety and virtue, the greater ſtir they keep about theſe things, that they may ſeem to be ſomething in religion; juſt like thoſe, who being conſcious to themſelves that they are defective in true and uſeful learning, that they may not ſeem to be ſo, are always troubleſome with the ſhreds and ends of it.

Now, the indifferent circumſtances of religion are things which no man ought to have the face to trouble himſelf about, that neglects the weighty and ſubſtantial duties of it. No man that hath a beam in his own eye, ought to be concerned for the mote that is in his brother's eye. Indeed, he that is careful of the main parts of religion, may and ought to be concerned for the other in their due place, ſo far as the order and decency of God's worſhip, and obedience to authority, and the peace of Chriſtians is concerned in them. But to place all religion in a zeal for or againſt theſe things, is one of the thinneſt and ſlighteſt forms of religion.

VIII. Silline ſs and freakiſhneſs, and either a pretended or real ignorance in the common affairs and concernments of human life.

This may ſeem, at firſt hearing, to be a very odd form of religion; and, indeed, ſo it is; yet in ſeveral religions, men have appeared in it with great applauſe and acceptance. Among the Turks, idiots and madmen are mightily reverenced, it being always taken for granted that they are inſpired. And, among the Papiſts, the moſt eminent of their ſaints, if their legends do not belie them, eſpecially St Francis and St Dominic, are magnified ſcarcely for any other reaſon, but for ſaying and doing the moſt ſilly and ridiculous things. What can be imagined more fooliſh and fantaſtical than St Francis's ſtripping himſelf of his cloaths, and running about naked? than his frequent preaching to the birds, and beaſts, and fiſhes? Was ever any thing more nauſeouſly ridiculous, than his picking up the lice which were beaten off his cloaths, and putting them in his boſom? which is magniſied in him as a profound piece of humility; as if naſtineſs were a Chriſtian grace. Theſe, and many more ſuch freaks which are related in his life, as inſtances of his great ſanctity, ſerve to no other purpoſe, but to render religion ridiculous to any man of common ſenſe: As if to be a ſpiritual man, and a mere natural, were all one; and as if this were a good conſequence, that a man cannot chuſe but be very knowing in religion, becauſe he is very ſilly in all other things; and muſt needs have abundance of grace, becauſe he hath no wit. It is pity it ſhould be ſo: but I am afraid it is too true, that the greateſt miſchiefs that have been done to the world, have been done by ſilly well-meaning men.

Laſtly, Great noiſe and talk about religion.

This is as empty a form as any of the reſt, and yet this does ſtrangely pleaſe and ſatisfy a great many. If a man do but mix ſomething of religion with all his diſcourſes, and be often ſpeaking of God and heavenly things, this paſſeth for a more than ordinary character of a religious man. And many deceive themſelves with it; they have talked of religion ſo long, till they believe they have it.

Not but that this is a good thing, provided it be ordered with diſcretion and humility, and be not forced and affected, impertinent and troubleſome. But then we muſt have a great care that other things be anſwerable. Our lives muſt juſtify our godly talk, and our actions must give weight to our words; for nothing is more odious than a religious and good discourse from the mouth of a bad man. This made our Saviour so full of indignation against the Scribes and Pharisees; they were not what they appeared to be in their discourse and outward garb. They said and did not; therefore he compares them to whited walls and painted sepulchres, that were beautiful indeed without, but within were full of all uncleanness and rottenness.

It is true indeed, that out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh; if religion be within, it will appear in mens words as well as actions; this is a fire that will break out: but the best men are very modest, and make little noise, do nothing out of ostentation, and to be taken notice of, and had rather refrain from good words, than to make an unseasonable shew of religion.

Speech is intended to signify the inward sense of mens minds, but it does not always do so; men may be full of religious talk, when there is nothing of religion in their hearts, nothing answerable in their lives: men may speak like angels, and yet do like devils.

Therefore let no man deceive himself, or think to deceive others with this appearance of religion: for, let men talk never so piously, every considerate man knows that there is more of true religion in one good action, than in a thousand good words.

And thus I have done with the first thing, viz. wherein a form of religion doth consist.

Secondly, Wherein the power of godliness doth consist. And because it is very material to be rightly informed in this, I will reduce the several particulars to these four general heads:

I. A due sense of God, and suitable affections towards him.

II. A sincere and diligent use of the means and instruments of religion.

III. A firm and steady resolution of well-doing.

IV. As the proper and genuine effect of all these, the practice of a good life, in the several parts and instances of it.

I. A due ſenſe of God, and ſuitable affections towards him. This is the principle and fountain of all religion, from whence all actions of piety and goodneſs do ſpring.

Under this I comprehend a lively ſenſe of God's being; which the Apoſtle tells us is fundamentally neceſſary to all religion: He that cometh to God, muſt believe that he is. This is the great ſpring of all religious motions, and of our dependence upon him; the lively ſenſe whereof will make us humble and thankful, and teach us to acknowledge him in all our ways, and to refer all our concernments to him; and of our ſubjection to him, which will make us obedient to his laws, and ſubmiſſive to his pleaſure; nothing being more reaſonable than that he that gave us our lives ſhould have the entire government and diſpoſal of them; than that he that made us what we are, ſhould command us what we ſhould do. In ſhort, this comprehends faith in God, or a readineſs to aſſent to what he reveals, with the fear and the love of God, which are the great principles of religion.

II. A ſincere and diligent uſe of the means and inſtruments of religion, ſuch as prayer, reading, and hearing the word of God, and receiving the ſacraments. Theſe are the means which God hath appointed for the improving of us in holineſs and goodneſs; and we ſincerely uſe [theſe means, when we really aim at this end; when we pray, and read, and hear, and meditate on God's word, and receive the ſacraments, that we may truly become better, more holy and virtuous in all manner of converſation; and do not reſt in the uſe of theſe means, as if a man were a religious and good man, becauſe he prays often, and every day reads the Bible, and goes to all the ſermons he can hear of, and takes all occaſions to receive the ſacrament. The life of religion does not conſiſt in the bare uſe of theſe, but in the real efficacy of them upon our lives. It is a very good caution which St John gives us, Be not deceived; he that doth righteouſneſs is righteous, even as he is righteous, 1 John iii. 6. Men are apt to impoſe upon themſelves, as if they could be righteous, and approve themſelves to God, upon ſome other terms; whereas only only they that fear God, and work righteouſnëſs, are accepted with him.

I do not ſpeak this to undervalue the exerciſes of religion, but to inform men of the true nature and deſign of them. Be as diligent as thou wilt in the exerciſes of piety and devotion, but be ſincere in the uſe of thoſe means; do not ſatisfy thyſelf in the performance of thoſe duties, unleſs thou find the effect of them upon thy heart and life, always remembering, that not the hearers of the word, but the doers of it, are bleſſed; that the prayer, and all the ſacrifices of the wicked are an abomination to the Lord.

III. A firm and ſteady reſolution of well-doing. This is the reſult of a true and ſincere repentance, and the great principle of a new life; and if it be firm and ſtedfaſt, it will derive its influence into all our actions; but if it be wavering and inconſiſtent, it is only the occaſion of a religious mood and fit, but not the principle of a religious ſtate. Therefore it concerns us to ſtrengthen this principle, and to be true to it, when we have once taken it up; for whenever we quit it, we break looſe from God and religion at once, and caſt ourſelves back into a much more dangerous ſtate than we were in before.

There is no doubt, but that the devil and our own corrupt hearts will make many aſſaults upon ſuch a reſolution, and raiſe all their batteries againſt it, becauſe it is our main fort, and the great ſecurity of our ſouls, and ſo long as we maintain that, we are ſafe; and therefore it had need be a mighty reſolution that is able to ſtand out againſt ſuch oppoſition.

But what are we that we ſhould take up ſuch a reſolution, and what is our ſtrength? We are weak and unſtedfaſt as water, reeds ſhaken with the wind; we are not ſufficient of ourſelves, as of ourſelves, for any thing that is good; the way of man is not in himſelf, nor is it in man that walks to direct his ſteps; but we have a greater ſtrength than our own to rely upon, and greater than that of any adverſe power that can ſet itſelf againſt us; we have God on our ſide, and the aſſiſtance of his grace to back and fortify theſe holy reſolutions; ſo that we have no reaſon to deſpair of ſucceſs and victory, if we be not wanting to ourſelves; for God's grace is ſufficient for us; greater is he that is in us, than he that is in the world.

IV. And laſtly, which is the proper and genuine effect of all theſe, the practice of a holy and virtuous life in all the parts and inſtances of it. And unleſs this effect be produced, we want the ſureſt evidence of the former: for it is not credible that that man hath a due ſenſe of God, and pious affections towards him, or does ſincerely exerciſe himſelf in the duties of religion, or is firmly reſolved in well-doing, who does not ſhew forth the effects of all this in a good converſation. Thus St James reaſons, chap. iii. 13. Who is a wiſe man, and endued with knowledge amongſt you? that is, inſtructed in the Chriſtian knowledge, in the heavenly wiſdom; let him ſhew forth, out of a good converſation, his works.

So that herein the power of godlineſs doth viſibly appear in the courſe of a good life; and it is the very deſign of the Apoſtle, in this chapter, to declare this to us, as will appear to any one that conſiders the deſcription here given of thoſe perſons, who, under a ſhew of religion, denied the power of it; they were ſuch as, notwithſtanding all their pretences to godlineſs, allowed themſelves in ſeveral vices, and luſts, and paſſions, and were deſtitute of the virtues of a good life; they were ſelfiſh, and covetous, and vain-glorious, and proud, evil-ſpeakers; diſobedient to parents, unthankful to their benefactors, filthy and impure, treacherous, heady, conceited, ſenſual, and voluptuous; ſo that whatever appearance of godlineſs they made, they were almoſt as bad as could be imagined; there is hardly a fuller catalogue of ſins to be met with in the Bible: beſides that all theſe vices are ſuch as are plain and evident in the lives of men.

So that, upon the whole matter, it is very clear wherein the Apoſtle mainly places the power of godlineſs, namely, in the real effects of religion, ſuch as are the mortifying of our luſts, and ſubduing of our paſſions, the government of our tongues, and the ſeveral virtues of a good life.

1. In the mortifying of our luſts, the luſts of intemperance and uncleanneſs, covetouſneſs, and ambition. He

that

that is a ſlave to any of theſe. his religion is but a form, how glorious a ſhew ſoever it may make. Fleſhly luſts war againſt the ſoul, and will finally ruin it. Covetouſneſs and pride are enmity to God. God reſiſts the proud afar of, and the covetous man the Lord abhors.

2. In the ſubduing of our paſſions, wrath, hatred, malice, envy, and revenge. They are the very nature and properties of the devil, and diſpoſitions as contrary to God, as light is to darkneſs: therefore, whoever allows himſelf in theſe, whatever pretences he makes to religion, is really a bad man. This St John tells us is a plain caſe: 1 John iii. 10. Whoſoever doth not righteouſneſs, is not of God, neither he that loveth not his brother. James iii. 13, 14. But if ye have bitter envying and ſtrife in your hearts, glory not, and lie not againſt the truth, that is, do not pretend to be religious; this wiſdom deſcendeth not from above, but is earthly, ſenſual, deviliſh.

3. In the government of our tongues. This is a great effect of religion, to keep our tongues from ſpeaking evil, from backbiting, and ſlandering, and cenſuring, and reviling, from profane ſwearing and curſing, lewd and filthy talking. When mens tongues run out into theſe diſorders, it is a ſign that they are not under the government of religion, and that the fear of God hath not ſeized upon their hearts; for out of the abundance of the heart the mouth ſpeaketh. So St James tells us, chap. i. 26. If any man among you ſeem to be religious, and bridleth not his tongue, but deceiveth his own heart; this man's religion is vain. And, on the contrary, it is a good ſign that religion hath ſome power over men, when it reſtrains them in this kind. So the ſame Apoſtle tells us, chap. iii. 2. If any man offend not in word, the ſame is a perfect man.

4. In the ſeveral virtues of a good life, in oppoſition to theſe and all other vices; ſuch as are truth and juſtice, humility and meekneſs, patience and contentedneſs with our condition, peaceableneſs and charity to thoſe that are in want and neceſſity, a readineſs to forgive our enemies, and an univerſal love and kindneſs to all men. I have not time to recommend theſe particularly to you; the ſcripture does it frequently and fully, telling us that these are the will of God, and the divine nature, the new creature, pure religion and undefiled, the wisdom that is from above, the fruits of the Spirit, the proper and genuine effects of true piety, the sensible and substantial evidences of our love to God, the things wherein the kingdom of God consists, and that he that in these things serveth Christ, is accepted of God, and approved of men; but he that neglects these, whatever form of godliness he puts on, is a denier of the power of it. In this the children of God are manifest, and the children of the devil. He that doth not righteousness, is not of God.

Thus I have done with the second thing I propounded to speak to, namely, wherein the power of godliness consists. There are two other particulars remaining, which I shall reserve to a farther opportunity.

SERMON CCV.

Of the form, and the power of godliness.

2 TIM. iii. 5.

Having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof.

The second sermon on this text.

THE third thing propounded, was to give some marks, whereby we may know when these are separated, when there is a form of religion without the power of it.

I need not insist long upon this, because this will, in a good measure appear by the account I have given of these two severally, of the form of religion, and of the power of it; for he that considers wherein each of these consists, will easily judge when they are separated. But yet, that we may be sure not to mistake in a matter of so great concernment, I will instance in two or three three groſs and palpable characters of this, and they are ſo comprehenſive as to contain moſt of the reſt.

I. He hath only a form of godlineſs, who minds merely the external part of religion, without any inward ſenſe of it.

II. He that uſeth only the means of religion, without regard to the end and effect of it.

III. He that is groſly and knowingly defective in the practice of any part of it.

I. He hath only a form of godlineſs, who minds merely the external part of religion, without any inward ſenſe of it. He that worſhips and ſerves God outwardly, but hath no inward reverence and eſteem for him, who cares not, ſo the work be done, and the duty performed, with what heart and affection he does it. This is a mere carcaſe of religion, which is ſo far from being pleaſing to God, that it is intolerably offenſive to him; for though it be outwardly an honour done to God, yet really and in truth it is a contempt of him.

And yet it is to be feared, that this is a religion which many in the world chuſe and content themſelves with. They can ſerve God an hour together, and mention his name an hundred times, without ever thinking of him, or being affected with the buſineſs they are about: nay, which is worſe, this is a religion which a great part of the world uſe, and cannot help it; I mean all thoſe who ſerve God in an unknown tongue. For how is it poſſible their minds and hearts can be concerned in a ſervice they do not underſtand? They may poſſibly have a devout mind in general; but they cannot exerciſe any acts of devotion in the particular ſervice they are engaged in. The beſt of men are apt enough to let their thoughts ſwerve, and go aſtray from God when they are worſhipping of him, though they underſtand the ſervice they are about; but when they do not underſtand, it is impoſſible their minds and thoughts ſhould go along with it, and be concerned in what is done. This is properly, and in the ſtrict ſenſe of the word, μόρφωσις εὐσεβείας, "an image of religion and "devotion, without any life or ſenſe." And if to have our bodies put in a devout poſture, to move our hands, and lips, and eyes, without underſtanding the ſervice we we offer to God, may be accounted worſhipping of him, this is a ſervice that may be performed by puppets as well as men. God is a Spirit; and they that worſhip him, muſt worſhip him in ſpirit and in truth. In ſpirit and in truth, in oppoſition to a mere bodily ſervice, and external ſhew of devotion. God, who is a ſpirit, muſt be worſhipped with our ſpirits. He expects from reaſonable creatures a reaſonable ſervice; and that ſervice only is reaſonable, which is dictated by our underſtandings, and accompanied with our hearts and affections: and to worſhip him otherwiſe, is to offer a ſacrifice without a heart; it is to offer the lame and the blind in ſacrifice, which would be an affront to our governor, much more to the great King of the world. Whatever we do in the ſervice of God, we muſt do it heartily as to the Lord, becauſe he is the ſearcher of hearts, and all things are open and naked to the eyes of him with whom we have to do.

II. He hath only a form of godlineſs, that uſeth only the means of religion, without regard to the end and effect of them. A man may exerciſe his underſtanding in the ſervice of God, and his heart may be touched, and his affections moved in prayer, and at the hearing of God's word, and the receiving of the ſacrament, and yet this may be but a form of religion, if it go no farther. If we do not forſake thoſe ſins we confeſs to God, and daily beg the pardon of; if we do not truly and heartily endeavour that we may live godly, and righteous and ſober lives, as well as pray that we may do ſo; if the counſels and directions of God's word have not an influence upon our lives; if we be not awed by the threatenings of it, to leave our ſins, and encouraged by the promiſes of it, to cleanſe ourſelves from all filthineſs of fleſh and ſpirit, and to perfect holineſs in the fear of God; we uſe the means of religion to no purpoſe, and we diſcredit the inſtitutions of God, becauſe we make no proficiency under them. We are juſt like the diſciples of thoſe formal profeſſors of religion, whom the Apoſtle deſcribes after the text, who are ever learning, but never able to come to the knowledge of the truth. It ſeems they uſed the means of inſtruction, and continued to uſe them, they were ever learning; but all this while while they were under the dominion of ſin, and the power of their luſts; they were laden with ſin, and led away with divers luſts, and ſo they never attained to that which the Apoſtle calls the knowledge of the truth, that is, ſuch a knowledge of the doctrine of Chriſt as is accompanied with a ſuitable practice, according to that of our Saviour, John viii. 31. If ye continue in my word, that is, if ye practiſe my doctrine, then are ye my diſciples indeed, and ye ſhall know the truth, and the truth ſhall make you free. Then men come to the knowledge of the truth, when it frees them from the ſlavery of ſin. If our knowledge have not this effect, it ſignifies nothing, and does not deſerve the name of knowledge, becauſe we know nothing in religion as we ought to know. 1 John ii. 2, 3. ſpeaking of the knowledge of Chriſt, Hereby do we know that we know him, if we keep his commandments. He that ſaith he knows him, and keepeth not his commandments, is a liar, and the truth is not in him.

III. He hath only a form of religion, who is groſsly and knowingly defective in the practice of any part of it. And this ſort of perſons are thoſe whom the Apoſtle particularly intended here in the text; for ſuch were they whom he deſcribes by this character, that they had a form of godlineſs, but denied the power of it. Under the garb of religion which they had put on, they were groſsly faulty in their lives and practice, and mainly defective in many of the eſſential duties of Chriſtianity; they were ſelfiſh and coveţous, vain-glorious and deſpiſers of others, calumniators and ſlanderers, undutiful to their ſuperiors, and unthankful to thoſe that had obliged them, fierce and ill-natured, treacherous and falſe to their word, perſecutors of thoſe that were good, filthy and ſenſual: not that every one of them had all theſe vices, they are ſo many and groſs, that no cloak of religion could have covered them; but the Apoſtle means, that, among thoſe that made an empty profeſſion of religion, theſe vices were viſible, ſome of them in one, and ſome in another. And the living in any one of theſe, or any other of the like nature, is inconſiſtent with Chriſtianity. The power of religion appears chiefly in the ſubduing of theſe luſts, and in the exerciſe and practice of thoſe graces and virtues which are contrary to theſe. Here the very heart and life of religion lies, and theſe are the veins in which it runs; and if there be a failure in any of theſe main virtues of a Chriſtian life, it is a plain caſe, that we are deſtitute of the power of religion, and do only make a vain and empty ſhew of it. St James inſtanceth, as one would think, in none of the groſſeſt and moſt conſiderable of theſe, the government of our tongue, and yet he peremptorily determines, that the want of this virtue is enough to deſtroy all a man's other pretences to religion, chap. i. 26. If any man among you ſeem to be religious, and bridleth not his tongue, but deceives his own heart; this man's religion is vain.

So that, by the practice or neglect of theſe main virtues of a good life, every man may examine and judge himſelf. This is the rule which our Saviour gives to try the religion of men by: Matth. vii. 16, 17. Ye ſhall know them by their fruits. Do men gather grapes of thorns, or figs of thiſtles? Even ſo every good tree bringeth forth good fruit; but a corrupt tree bringeth forth evil fruit. A good tree cannot bring forth evil fruit; neither can a corrupt tree bring forth good fruit. Wherefore by their fruits ye ſhall know them. The force of which reaſoning is this, that every tree bringeth forth fruit according to its nature, and by the kind and quality of the fruit, you may certainly know what the tree is. So, by the good or bad actions of mens lives, you may know by what principle they are governed, whether the fear of God, or the love of ſin, bear ſway in them; the courſe of their lives will diſcover the bent and inclination of their minds, whatever ſhew and profeſſion they may make to the contrary. By their fruits ye ſhall know them. Not every one that ſaith unto me, Lord, Lord, (there is ſome profeſſion of religion) ſhall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doth the will of my Father which is in heaven; (there is the power of it).

I would by no means encourage men to be over cenſorious towards others, there is too much of that ſpirit already in the world; but it is not amiſs that men ſhould be ſtrict and ſevere towards themſelves. And would to God men would bring themſelves to this teſt, and examine the truth and ſincerity of their religion, not by the leaves of an outward profeſſion, but by the fruits it produceth in their lives. Every man that will but take the pains to look into himſelf, and to obſerve his own actions, may, by comparing the temper of his mind, and the general courſe of his life and practice, with the rules and precepts of religion, eaſily diſcern what power and efficacy religion hath on him. A man may as certainly know himſelf, and make as ſure a judgment of his ſtate and condition toward God in this way, as a tree is known by its fruit. Therefore let us not flatter ourſelves: for if we indulge any luſt, or irregular paſſion in our ſouls, and do not endeavour to mortify and ſubdue it; if we allow ourſelves in any vicious practice in our lives; we do but deeeive ourſelves with an opinion of our godlineſs, and whatever ſhew and appearance we may make of religion, we are certainly deſtitute of the power of it. True religion and godlineſs is an uniform principle, which inclines a man to all holineſs and goodneſs, and does bias him againſt all known ſin and wickedneſs. All the motives and arguments of religion, and all conſiderations of piety, are levelled againſt all ſin, and tend to engage men to univerſal holineſs of life. Bonum conſtat ex integris cauſis, ſed malum ex quolibet defectu: the practice of any one vice, is enough to render a man a bad man; but there muſt be the concurrence of all the parts of religion and virtue, to make a man good.

I proceed to the fourth thing I propounded, which was to ſhew, that a form of godlineſs, without the power of it, is inſignificant to all the great ends and purpoſes of religion. The great ends that men can reaſonably propound to themſelves in being religious, are theſe three:

I. The pleaſing of God.

II. The peace and tranquillity of our own minds.

III. The ſaving of our ſouls. Now, a form of godlineſs, without the power of it, is unavailable to all theſe purpoſes.

I. To the pleaſing of God. External devotion, and exerciſing ourſelves in the means and inſtruments of religion, and the profeſſion of a right belief, or any other form of religion whatſoever, do not recommend

any man to the divine favour and acceptance, without the real effects of religion in a good life: nay, so far is it from this, that all forms of religion, destitute of the life and power of it, are extremely odious and offensive to him. Devotion in prayer, without a holy life, is but a rude and troublesome noise in the ears of the Almighty. The prayer of the wicked is so far from being accepted, that it is an abomination to him. He does not love to be invoked by unhallowed mouths, and to be praised by the workers of iniquity. Flattery is hateful to a wise man, much more to the infinitely wise God. He cannot endure that men should lift up eyes to him that are full of adultery, and hands filled with violence and oppression, and tread his courts with feet ready to shed blood. It is an affront to God to be worshipped by evil-doers, and to see men diligent in reading his word, and attending to his law, who break it every day. Unto the wicked God saith, What hast thou to do to declare my statutes, or that thou shouldst take my covenant in thy mouth, seeing thou hatest to be reformed, and castest my words behind thy back? What God says of the sacrifices of the Jews, offered to him by a sinful people laden with iniquity, may be applied to the worship of Christians who live wicked and abominable lives, Is. i. 11, 12, &c. To what purpose is the multitude of your sacrifices unto me? saith the Lord: I am full of the burnt-offerings of rams, and the fat of fed beasts, and I delight not in the blood of bulls, or of lambs, or of he-goats. When ye come to appear before me, who hath required this at your hands, to tread my courts? Bring no more vain oblations. Incense is an abomination unto me: the new moons and sabbaths, and the calling of assemblies, I cannot away with; it is iniquity, even the solemn meetings. Your new moons, and your appointed feasts my soul hateth, they are a trouble unto me. I am weary to bear them. And when you spread forth your hands, I will hide mine eyes from you; yea, when you make many prayers, I will not hear. Wash you, make you clean, put away the evil of your doings from before mine eyes, cease to do evil, learn to do well. This is that which God expects from us, the amendment and reformation of our lives, and without this, all our religious addresses to him are nauseous and abominable. God does hardly any where in ſcripture expreſs ſo great a deteſtation of the greateſt ſins, as he does of the devotion of wicked men. I will but bring one text more to this purpoſe, Iſaiah lxvi. 3. He that killeth an ox, is as if he ſlew a man: he that ſacrificeth a lamb, as if he cut off a dog's neck: he that offereth an oblation, as if he offered ſwine's blood: he that burneth incenſe, as if he bleſſed an idol. What is the reaſon of all theſe ſevere expreſſions? Becauſe they were the ſacrifices of the wicked, of thoſe who had choſen their own ways, and whoſe ſoul delighted in their abominations; they worſhipped God according to his will, but lived according to their own; and, therefore, they were to him no better than an aſſembly of murderers, and a church of idolatrous worſhippers: for this is falſe worſhip, to offer ſacrifices to God, and to devote ourſelves to the ſervice of our luſts.

II. Another end of religion is the peace and tranquillity of our own minds. And this is not to be attained, upon true and laſting grounds, by any form of religion, without the power of it. Men may delude themſelves with ſome falſe peace, and make a hard ſhift to ſtop the loud and vehement clamours of their conſcience; but the guilt of any vicious courſe of life will frequently recoil upon them, to diſturb and interrupt their peace, and to put out their falſe joy; their conſciences will ever and anon give them many ſecret girds and laſhes. For no man can knowingly live in the practice of any ſin, but he muſt be guilty to himſelf; and, whoever is guilty, hath received a ſecret ſting into his heart, which is never to be taken out, but by repentance, and a thorough reformation. God hath ſaid it, and I doubt not but every ſinner finds it true, There is no peace to the wicked. Eſpecially when ſuch a man is ſeized upon by ſickneſs, and approaches in his thoughts near to eternity, then his drowſy conſcience awakes, like a lion out of ſleep, full of rage and fierceneſs, and all his falſe peace and comfort vaniſheth. For what is the hope of the hypocrite, when God comes to take away his ſoul? It is, as Job elegantly expreſſes it, like the ſpider's web, artificially wrought, but miſerably weak, it can endure no ſtreſs, upon the leaſt touch it breaks and vaniſheth.

And this is no ſmall diſadvantage which a man that hath only the form of religion lies under, that, in effect, he loſeth all the pleaſure and ſatisfaction of religion; or, if he fancy any hope or comfort to himſelf, it is built upon a falſe foundation, which, when it is tried, will endure no ſhock. This is the compariſon our Saviour uſeth in this very caſe, Matth. vii. 26, 27. Every one that heareth theſe ſayings of mine, and doth them not, (here is a form of godlineſs, without the power of it) ſhall be likened to a fooliſh man, which built his houſe upon the ſand; and the rain deſcended, and the floods came, and the winds blew, and beat upon that houſe, and it fell, and great was the fall of it. But real and ſubſtantial religion is like a houſe built upon a rock, which no tempeſt can overthrow. Righteouſneſs, ſaith Solomon, Prov. x. 25. is an everlaſting foundation; it is a continual ſpring of joy and peace. There is a certain unſpeakable contentment and delight ariſing from a good conſcience, and from the ſincere diſcharge of our duty, which a hypocrite is a ſtranger to, and is never admitted to the taſte of. Now, what an uncomfortable thing is this, for a man to take the pains to ſeem to be religious, and yet to loſe the real pleaſure of religion!

III. The great end of all, of being religious, is the ſaving of our ſouls. And this end a mere form of religion will certainly miſs of. No external garb of religion will gain a man admiſſion into heaven; there is no getting in there in maſquerade; no prayers will then avail, tho' never ſo fervent and importunate. Many ſhall ſay in that day, Lord, Lord, open unto us; and yet he will bid them depart from him. Though we had heard Chriſt himſelf preach, and had received the bleſſed ſacrament with him, yet this will not avail. So our Saviour tells us, Luke xiii. 26. Then ſhall they begin to ſay, We have eaten and drunken in thy preſence, and thou haſt taught in our ſtreets; and yet he will ſay unto them, I know not whence you are. It is not a pretence to inſpiration, no, though it were juſtified by miraculous gifts, that will then ſtand us in ſtead. Many ſhall ſay in that day, Lord, Lord, have we not propheſied in thy name, and in thy name have caſt out devils, and in thy name have done many wondrous works? And yet theſe ſhall be rejected. Why, what ſhould be the reaſon of all this ſeverity? Our Saviour gives us a plain account of it; because they were workers of iniquity. Under all these several masks of religion, they were wicked in their lives.

It is not an orthodox faith, and the belief of all the articles of Christianity, that will save a man, without the works of a good life: James ii. 14. What doth it profit a man, my brethren, though a man say that he hath faith, and hath not works? Can faith save him? thou believest there is one God; thou dost well; the devils believe this too, but they are not so vain as to hope to be saved by this faith; no, they know the contrary, and that makes them fear and tremble. Know then, O vain man, that faith without works is dead. Thou believest in one Lord Jesus Christ, that came down from heaven to save us, that was conceived by the Holy Ghost, born of the virgin Mary, and became man, that he might bring us to God; that suffered and died for our sins, and rose again for our justification, and is ascended into heaven, and sitteth at the right hand of God the Father Almighty, and from thence he shall come again at the end of the world, to judge the quick and the dead; thou dost well to believe this: but if thou do not live accordingly, what will become of thee, when the Son of God shall come to judge the world? then the great enquiry will be, how we have lived? what good we have done? So our Saviour represents the proceedings of that great day: I was hungry, and ye gave me no meat; I was thirsty, and ye gave me no drink; naked, and ye clothed me not; sick and in prison, and ye visited me not: therefore, depart, ye cursed, into everlasting fire. So that it seems here the business will stick upon the good or bad actions of mens lives, and accordingly sentence shall be pronounced upon them. For God will render to every man according to his works: to them that, by patient continuance in well-doing, seek for glory, and honour, and immortality, eternal life: but to those that obey not the truth, but obey unrighteousness, indignation and wrath, tribulation and anguish, upon every soul of man that doth evil, of the Jew first, and also of the Gentile: but glory, and honour, and peace to every man that worketh good; to the Jew first, and also to the Gentile: for not the hearers of the law are just be- fore God, but the doers of the law ſhall be juſtified. Still you ſee, that it is to the patient continuance in well-doing, to the obeying of the truth, to the working of righteouſneſs, that eternal life is promiſed: and the wrath of God is threatened to them that obey unrighteouſneſs, to every ſoul of man that doth evil. To the Jew firſt, Why ſo? Becauſe he had great advantage of coming to the knowledge of the truth, which is ſo much the greater aggravation of his wicked life, and makes his ſentence ſo much the heavier.

Indeed, it ſhall be to men at the day of judgment likewiſe according to their faith, in a certain ſenſe, that is, according to the doctrine of the goſpel which they profeſs to believe; according to what our Saviour and his Apoſtles have taught, that the workers of iniquity ſhall depart from him; that, without holineſs, no man ſhall ſee the Lord; and if we live after the fleſh, we ſhall die; that no whoremonger, nor adulterer, nor covetous, nor unrighteous perſon, ſhall have any inheritance in the kingdom of God, and of Chriſt. This we profeſs to believe, and, according to theſe declarations, God will proceed with men at the great day. And he that believes this, and yet goes on in an impiety and wickedneſs of life, though his faith will not juſtify him, yet God will juſtify his faith, and make it good, when he ſhall judge the world in righteouſneſs.

Thus you ſee plainly, that a form of godlineſs, without the power, is inſignificant to all the great ends and purpoſes of religion; nay, he that takes up in a form, does not only loſe the advantages of religion, but he hath two great diſadvantages by it.

I. He hath the trouble of making a ſhew of religion, without the real benefit of it.

II. He incurs a heavier ſentence upon this very account.

But theſe, with the application, I ſhall refer to the next opportunity.

SERMON

SERMON CCVI.

Of the form, and the power of godliness.

2 TIM. iii. 5.

Having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof.

The third sermon on this text.

I Come now to shew, that he that takes upon him a form of religion, without the power of it, doth not only lose all the considerable advantages of religion, but he hath two great disadvantages by it.

I. He hath the trouble of making a shew and appearance of religion, without the real benefit of it.

II. He incurs a heavier sentence upon this account, that he hath a form of religion, and yet is destitute of the power of it.

I. He hath the trouble of making a shew and appearance of religion, without the real benefit of it. And it is no small trouble to personate and act a part well; it requires great art and attention, great guard and caution. That which men are prompted to by an inward principle, is natural and easy, it is done with pleasure and delight; but whatever is artificial and counterfeit, is stiff and forced. Nemo fictam personam diu sustinere potest; "No man "can dissemble always;" one time or other he will be surprised, and forget himself, and let his mask fall. A form of religion is a dry unpleasant thing, and a continual burden to him that assumes it, and the more outwardly strict and holy he is, he is the more inwardly guilty; his conscience never stings and galls him more than when he is playing the hypocrite with God and men: whereas a truly good man, when he employs himself in acts of religion, or juſtice, or charity, he doth it naturally, and hath a mighty ſatisfaction of mind in the doing of it, and, if he were permitted to make his own choice, he would not do otherwiſe; but a hypocrite puts a force upon himſelf all the while, and acts againſt his nature and inclinations; every thing that he does in religion goes againſt the grain, and, becauſe it is unnatural, muſt be uneaſy; his outward converſation and demeanor is ſet, and in a frame; he does not move as he would, but as he muſt; and the ſecret propenſions of his nature are under a continual reſtraint.

He hath indeed one advantage by his artificial garb, that he can more ſecurely over-reach and defraud others by a ſhew of godlineſs, while men are not aware of his diſſimulation. But this commonly does not laſt long, and only ſerves a man for a few turns: and when it is diſcovered, the man is loſt, and nobody will truſt him. But, ſuppoſe he could ſerve himſelf of religion this way for ſome conſiderable time, where is the advantage? It amounts to no more than this, that the man hath the opportunity of being a greater ſinner, of making himſelf more miſerable, and treaſuring up to himſelf more wrath againſt the day of wrath. So that he pays dear for all this in the end and iſſue, as well as in the way. He ſpends many a tedious hour in the ſervice of God, and the exerciſe of religion; more it may be than many do, who ſave their ſouls, and get to heaven. For as to the external parts of religion, a hypocrite muſt do all that which a truly religious man does; he muſt frequent the church, and make as much ſhew of devotion as the beſt; nay, it may be, he prays more, and faſts oftner, and is more buſy, and keeps a greater ſtir in the outward part of religion, than the ſincere Chriſtian; for, being conſcious to himſelf of his own hollowneſs and inſincerity in religion, he thinks himſelf obliged outwardly to overact it, in unſeaſonable and ſuperſtitious obſervances, and in all other arts of affected devotion; and when he goes abroad into the world, he is forced to lay great reſtraints upon himſelf, and to be continually gathering his cloak about him, as being afraid leſt any body ſhould ſpy what is under it. So much more troubleſome it is for any man to ſeem to be religious, than to be ſo indeed.

II. A mere form of religion does, upon ſome accounts, bring a man under a heavier ſentence, than if he were openly profane and irreligious. He that makes a ſhew of religon, flatters God, but all the while acts and deſigns againſt him: whereas the profane man deals plainly; and though he be a monſtrous and unnatural rebel, yet he is a fair and open enemy; and the kiſſes of a falſe friend are more hateful than the wounds of an open enemy. Upon this account it is, that our Saviour denounces ſo many ſevere woes againſt the Scribes and Phariſees, becauſe they were wicked under a ſhew of religion, Wo unto you Scribes and Phariſees, hypocrites: and when he would ſet forth the ſeverity of the Lord againſt the evil ſervant, Matth. xxiv. 51. he expreſſeth it thus: He ſhall cut him aſunder, and appoint him his portion with the hypocrites; there ſhall be weeping and gnaſhing of teeth; as if the puniſhment of hypocrites were the rule and ſtandard of the ſevereſt puniſhment. He ſhall appoint him his portion with the hypocrites.

I will not deny, but that a profane man is a worſe example to the world, and may do more miſchief upon that account: but the hypocrite is more miſchievous to himſelf, and of the two more odious to God, and ſometimes does more prejudice to religion, by undermining it, than the other does by all his open aſſaults and batteries. God cannot endure to be affronted: but he hates to be mocked. So that, upon this account, it is like to go harder with the formal profeſſors of religion, than with the open contemners of it.

And thus I have done with the four things I propounded to ſpeak to, from theſe words; wherein a form of godlineſs does conſiſt; wherein the power of it lies; by what marks and characters we may know when theſe are ſeparated; and that a form of religion, without the power of it, is inſignificant to all the great ends and purpoſes of religion; and not only ſo, but it is greatly to mens diſadvantage to aſſume a form of godlineſs, if they be deſtitute of the power of it.

All that now remains, is to draw ſome inferences from this diſcourſe, by way of application; and they ſhall be theſe three.

Firſt

First, To take heed of miſtaking the form of religion for the power of it.

Secondly, To take heed of being captivated and ſeduced by thoſe who have only a form of godlineſs.

Thirdly, To perſuade men to mind the life, and power, and ſubſtance of religion.

First, To take heed of miſtaking the form of religion for the power of it. The Papiſts have almoſt confined the words religion and religious to cloiſters and monks; and they make a religious life to conſiſt in maſſes, and Ave-Maries, and Pater-noſters, in the obſervation of canonical hours, and the diſtinction of meats and habits, in coarſe cloaths, and a diſſembled poverty, and ſeveral bodily rigours and ſeverities; as if to make a man a religious and good man, it were neceſſary that he ſhould be dreſſed fantaſtically, and, in a great many indifferent things, be different from other men. Nay, ſo far doth this ſuperſtition prevail, that a great many think that they ſhould hardly get to heaven without it, or that it will be very much for their advantage, if they be buried in the habit of a religious man: as if, to be put in a monk's coul, would give a man the ſtart of other people at the reſurrection. But what reaſon is there, that the name and title of religion ſhould be appropriated to theſe uſages? Does the ſcripture any where conſtitute religion in theſe things, or confine it to them? are not theſe voluntary things, which God ties no man to? whence then come they to ſwallow up the name of religion, and to ingroſs it to themſelves, as if they were the very life and ſoul of Chriſtianity; when the great author of our religion, Jeſus Chriſt, and his bleſſed Apoſtles, never ſpake one word of them? What an abuſe of language is this, to confine the name of religion to that which is not ſo much as any part of it!

But the church of Rome is not alone guilty of this: among ourſelves, it is very ordinary to miſtake the form of godlineſs for the power, though the miſtake is not ſo groſs, as in thoſe particulars I have mentioned. How many are there who talk, as if the power of godlineſs conſiſted in nothing elſe but a daily taſk of devotion, in frequent hearing of ſermons, and a ſtrict obſervation of the Lord's day? Theſe are very good things; but they are but a form of godlineſs, and may be, and often are, without the power of it; they are but the means and inſtruments of religion, but not the great end and deſign of it; that conſiſts in the renewing of our natures, and the reformation of our lives, in righteouſneſs and true holineſs; in mortifying the fleſh, with the affections and luſts of it, ſuch as are adultery, fornication, hatred, variance, wrath, ſedition, envying, murder, drunkenneſs; for they which do ſuch things cannot inherit the kingdom of God; and in the fruits of the ſpirit, ſuch as are love, joy, peace, long-ſuffering, gentleneſs, goodneſs, fidelity, meekneſs, temperance, as the Apoſtle reckons them up, Gal. v. 22. Theſe are real and ſenſible effects of religion; and the means of religion, if they be ſincerely uſed, do all tend to the begetting and increaſing of theſe in us; ſo that it is a groſs miſtake to talk of the power of religion without theſe. Whoever is deſtitute of theſe, whatever attainments in religion he may pretend to, is got no farther than a form of godlineſs, he is not yet under the power of it. This is the firſt.

Secondly, Let us be cautioned againſt being captivated and ſeduced by thoſe who have only a form of godlineſs. This is the Apoſtle's exhortation here in the text. From ſuch turn away; for of this ſort are they which creep into houſes, and lead captive ſilly women. To the ſame purpoſe is our Saviour's caution, Matth. vii. 15, 16. Beware of falſe prophets, which come to you in ſheeps cloathing, but inwardly they are ravening wolves. And that we may know how to avoid them, our Saviour bids us to obſerve their lives: Ye ſhall know them by their fruits. He does not bid us examine their opinions, and try their pretences to inſpiration; that is a thing many times above the capacity of the ordinary ſort of men; but their lives and actions are open to every man's view; and tho' it is poſſible men may counterfeit even in this, yet they ſeldom do it ſo exactly, as not to betray themſelves ſome time or other: however, this, of all other, is the eaſieſt and ſureſt rule; By their fruits ye ſhall know them.

Therefore, if any man pretend to any new diſcoveries in religion, beyond what is plainly revealed in ſcripture, though he appear in never ſo ſanctimonious a garb, be not moved with this: for the power of religion does not conſiſt in any thing now to be diſcovered; but in thoſe things which are clearly contained in the word of God, in the precepts and directious, and in the motives and arguments to a good life; and whoever lives according to theſe, is in the beſt way to heaven that any man can put himſelf into; and he need not trouble himſelf about thoſe new lights and opinions, which, in every age, appear like comets, and glare a while, and draw people to gaze upon them, and then vaniſh. And none are ſo much to be ſuſpected of a form of religion, as thoſe who make frequent changes in it, and wander from one party and opinion to another. An outward form and ſhape is eaſily changed; it is that which a man ſhifts and puts off at pleaſure.

Thirdly, To perſuade men to mind the power, and life, and ſubſtance of religion. It was the commendation of Socrates, the beſt of philoſophers, that he did philoſophiam de cœlo deducere, "bring down philoſophy from "heaven to earth," that is, from contemplation to practice, and from being an art of talking and diſputing, to be an art of living. This I deſire my be the aim of all my diſcourſes, to inſtruct men in religion, in order to the practice of it, to teach men to know God, in St John's ſenſe, 1 John ii. 3. Hereby we know that we know him, if we keep his commandments. This is the great end and ſcope to which all diſcourſes of religion ought to be levelled. It was a good ſaying of Pacuvius, Ego odi homines ignava opera et philoſophos ſententia, "I hate men "that are inactive in their lives, and philoſophers in their "opinions." Chriſtianity is the beſt philoſophy, and the moſt perfect inſtitution of life that ever the world was acquainted withal; and, therefore, it is much more odious to ſee men Chriſtians in their profeſſion, and faulty and vicious in their lives; becauſe the very deſign of the Chriſtian religion, is to give men a perfect and plain law and rule of life, and to enforce this law by the moſt powerful and prevailing arguments. So that, as Tully ſays concerning the philoſopher who lived but a bad life, that he was utterly inexcuſable, Quod in eo cujus magiſter eſſe vult labitur, artem vitæ profeſſus, delinquit in vita:

"Becauſe

" Because he failed in that wherein he pretended to be a " master, and, while he professed to have an art of living " better than other men, he offended and miscarried in " his life;" all defects in the practice, and in the virtues of a good life, may, with much more reason and justice, be upbraided to Christians, to those who have learned Christ, who have heard him, and been taught by him, as the truth is in Jesus; to those who are blessed with the clearest and most perfect revelation which ever God made to the world, the holiest and most reasonable religion, which furnisheth us with the best counsels and directions, the most prevalent motives and arguments, and the greatest helps and advantages to a good life; a religion plain and simple, that hath less of outward form and pomp, and more of substance and reality, than any religion that ever was known in the world.

What a sad thing is it, that a religion so wholly fitted and calculated to the design and purpose of a good life, armed with such powerful considerations to engage men thereto, should yet have so little force and power upon the lives of men, as we see it generally to have! As if the grace of God had never appeared to men, to teach them to deny ungodliness and worldly lusts, and to live soberly, and righteously, and godly in this present world.

There was hardly ever any age, wherein the form of religion did more abound, and there were greater variety in them; and it is to be feared, that there was never less of the power and efficacy of it.

I will instance in two great defects in the lives and practice of Christians, which are visible to every one, but are sad indications how little the power of religion prevails among men; I mean, the want of common honesty and integrity among men, and the want of peace and love; the first of which is the great virtue of civil conversation, and the other, the great bond both of civil and ecclesiastical societies. These are two great duties of religion frequently mentioned, and strictly charged upon the consciences of men in scripture: and yet how rare is the practice of them in the lives of Christians? These are two main defects in religion, and a plain demonstration of a form of religion, without the power of it.

I. The

I. The want of common honesty and integrity among men. So indeed it used to be called, Common Honesty; but it grows so rare now, that it is like to lose that name, Righteousness, truth, and faithfulness, are almost failed from among the children of men; all ranks of men have corrupted themselves in this kind; this is grown almost an universal depravation; there is hardly any trade or profession which hath not something of knavery and falsehood woven into the very mystery of it, and is become almost a necessary part of it. Where is the generous honesty and uprightness which did heretofore possess the spirits of men, and which is an inseparable companion of true courage? but we are now passing apace into foreign manners and vices, and any form of religion will serve, when justice and integrity are gone.

II. The want of peace and love. How full of factions and divisions are we? and these managed with all imaginable heat and animosity toward one another; as if the badge of Christianity were changed, and our Saviour had said, Hereby shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye hate one another.

All the differences among Christians, of what denomination soever, are sadly to be lamented; but I almost despair as to the difference between us and the church of Rome, because the reconciliation is impossible, unless they renounce their principles. They cannot come over to us, because they think they are infallible; and we cannot pass over to them, because we know they are deceived; so that there is a great gulph between us and them. We must not only renounce the scriptures, but our reason and our senses, to be of their mind. We cannot communicate with them in the sacrament, because they have taken away one half of it, which is as plainly instituted and commanded, as the other part, which is left. We cannot worship the virgin Mary, and the saints, much less their images, because it is written, Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and him only shalt thou serve. Thou shalt not make to thyself any graven image, nor the likeness of any thing that is in heaven above, or in the earth beneath, or in the water under the earth; thou shalt not bow down to them, nor worship them; for I the Lord thy God am a jealous God. In short, ſeveral of their articles of faith are ſuch as no credulity can ſwallow; and ſeveral parts of their worſhip are ſuch as no piety can join with.

But this we bewail, that thoſe who agree in the ſame eſſentials of faith and worſhip ſhould be ſo forward to divide and ſeparate from one another, merely upon forms of government, and circumſtances of worſhip. What can juſtify the breach of communion and peace upon ſuch terms? Either church-government is of divine right, or it is not. If it be, why do not men ſubmit to the form which is eſtabliſhed by authority? If it be not, what kind of government can contend for that right, with any equality of advantage, againſt that which cannot be denied to have almoſt univerſally obtained in moſt ages and parts of the Chriſtian world?

As for the circumſtances of worſhip, there is ſcarce any man hath the face to contend, that any of thoſe uſed in our church are clearly condemned by the word of God; and what elſe can make them unlawful? One of the chief cauſes of ſeparation, is a form of prayer; the lawfulneſs of which our Saviour hath abundantly juſtified, and I do not think was ever queſtioned by any writer in the Chriſtian church, for near upon ſixteen hundred years; and is it worth while to break the peace of the church, and violate one of the greateſt precepts of Chriſtianity, upon little and ſlight pretences of unlawfulneſs, and doubtful reaſons of convenience and expedience; and about ſuch things as are no more reaſonable grounds of quarrels among Chriſtians, than the differences of mens ſtature and faces would be a juſt ground for mankind to make war upon one another?

Where is the power of religion, when the peace and unity of Chriſtians is violated upon theſe terms? It is a ſign that the life and ſubſtance of religion is little regarded by us, when men can afford to employ ſo much zeal about theſe things.

And that men may be effectually perſuaded to mind the ſubſtance of religion more, let me deſire them to imprint theſe three conſiderations upon their minds.

I. That the parts of religion are ſubordinate to one another, and are to be minded each in their due place.

The means of religion are leſs worth than the end, and therefore deſerve our regard chiefly in order to that. The circumſtances of religion are leſs conſiderable than the means and inſtruments of it, and therefore are to be ſubordinated to them. Faith is in order to the practice of a good life, and ſignifies nothing, unleſs it produces that. So that the iſſue and upſhot of all is a holy and virtuous life; to deny ungodlineſs and worldly luſts, and to live ſoberly, and righteouſly, and godly in this preſent world; to love God and our neighbour; to deal juſtly, and to be kind, and peaceable, and charitable towards all men.

II. Conſider that religion conſiſts in an entire and univerſal obedience to the will of God, in a reſpect to all his commandments, and hating every evil way. Here the power of godlineſs conſiſts in being holy in all manner of converſation.

III. Conſider that religion chiefly reſpects God, and another world. A form of religion, if it were artificially contrived, might poſſibly ſerve to cheat men, and be uſeful enough to all the intereſts and advantages of this world: but we are to do all things in reference to God, who cannot be impoſed upon with ſhews and pretences; and with regard to another world, where no form of religion will be current, without the power of it. Yea, and in reference to this world, if there be any advantage in ſeeming religious, certainly the beſt way to ſeem to be ſo, is to be ſo indeed.

SER-

SERMON CCVII.

Of the neceſſity of good works.

TIT. iii. 8.

This is a faithful ſaying, and theſe things I will that thou affirm conſtantly, that they which have believed in God, might be careful to maintain good works. Theſe things are good and profitable unto men.

The firſt ſermon on this text.

THIS epiſtle of St Paul to Titus, whom he had made Biſhop of Crete, contains directions how he ought to demean himſelf in that great charge.

1. By appointing in every city biſhops or elders, to teach and govern thoſe that were already, or ſhould afterwards, by their means, be converted to the faith of Chriſt; and to be very careful to make choice of worthy and fit perſons into this high office; men of ſound doctrine and unblameable lives, chap. i. from ver 5. to the end.

2. By his own doctrine and converſation among them. And this is the ſubject of the two following chapters, in which he gives him a ſtrict charge, to be very careful both of his doctrine and his life. Of his doctrine, that it be according to the ſoundneſs and purity of the goſpel; not ſuch corrupt and adulterate ſtuff, as the falſe apoſtles and teachers were wont to vend among them: chap. ii. 1. But ſpeak thou the things which become ſound doctrine; which he elſewhere calls the doctrine of truth which is according to godlineſs, ſuch a doctrine as tends to reform the lives of men, to make them better, and more like to God. And then he ſhould be careful likewiſe, that his life and converſation be exemplary in all virtue and goodneſs; without which the beſt words will be of little weight, and the wiſeſt doctrines and counſels of ſmall efficacy and force to perſuade others to the practice of them, ver. 7. In all things ſhewing thyſelf a pattern of good works. When ſound doctrine is ſeconded by the good life of the teacher, it muſt have great authority and force of perſuaſion: ver. 15. Theſe things ſpeak, and exhort, and rebuke with all authority; let no man deſpiſe thee. If the miniſter of God do but ſo preach and ſo live, this will give him authority, and ſet him above contempt; let men deſpiſe ſuch an one if they can.

More particularly, as he would have him inſtruct men in general in all the virtues of a good life; ſo more eſpecially, the ſeveral ages and conditions of men in the duties and virtues reſpectively belonging to them; to young and old, men and women.

And becauſe great ſcandal had been brought upon the Chriſtian religion, by the undutiful carriage of ſervants and ſubjects towards their maſters and magiſtrates, upon a falſe notion of Chriſtian liberty, advanced and propagated by the falſe apoſtles and Gnoſtic libertines, he gives Titus, in particular, charge to put Chriſtians in mind of their duty in this particular, and to inculcate it earneſtly upon them, that the Chriſtian religion might not be ſlandered upon this account: chap. ii. ver. 9, 10. Exhort ſervants to be obedient to their maſters, &c. that they may adorn the doctrine of God our Saviour in all things. Chap. iii. 1. Put them in mind to be ſubject to principalities and powers, and to be ready to every good work; that is, in ſhort, to endeavour to be good in all relations, and in all ſorts and kinds of goodneſs.

And then, ver. 8. he lays great ſtreſs and weight upon this matter, that Chriſtians ſhould conſtantly, and upon all occaſions, be taught the great neceſſity of the virtues of a good life. This is a faithful ſaying, &c. By which ſolemn and vehement kind of expreſſion, the Apoſtle ſeems to inſinuate, that the falſe apoſtles did exalt the virtue of faith, to the prejudice and neglect of a good life; as if, by a mere ſpeculative belief and profeſſion of the Chriſtian religion, men were diſcharged and releaſed from the practice of all virtue and goodneſs. And this is very probable, becauſe we find theſe kind of licentious doctrines very frequently reflected on, and reproved by the Apoſtles in their epiſtles, and eſpecially by St Paul. The falſe apoſtles made the Chriſtian religion a matter of mere ſpeculation and diſpute, but laid no weight upon the virtues of a good life. And therefore St. Paul, after he had charged Titus to inculcate upon Chriſtians the neceſſity of good works, immediately adds, But avoid fooliſh queſtions, and genealogies and contentions, and ſtrivings about the law; for they are unprofitable and vain; intimating, that the falſe apoſtles, inſtead of preſſing the neceſſity of a good life, did amuſe people with theſe idle notions and diſputes.

But to return to my text: This is a faithful ſaying. This kind of preface the Apoſtle uſeth ſeveral times, but always when he is ſpeaking of ſomething that is of great weight and concernment to us, and which deſerves our ſerious attention and regard; as in 1 Tim. i. 15. This is a faithful ſaying, and worthy of all acceptation, that Jeſus Chriſt came into the world to ſave ſinners. 1 Tim. iv. 8. Godlineſs is profitable unto all things; having the promiſe of the life that now is, and of that which is to come. This is a faithful ſaying. And 2 Tim. ii. 11, 12. This is a faithful ſaying; if we be dead with him, we ſhall alſo live with him; if we ſuffer, we ſhall alſo reign with him; if we deny him, he alſo will deny us. And ſo likewiſe here in the text, This is a faithful ſaying, that they which have believed in God, ſhould be careful to maintain good works. By which you ſee, that it is not a form which the Apoſtle uſeth of courſe, and applies to any thing, but only to things of more than ordinary conſideration and regard, ſuch as are of the eſſence of Chriſtianity, and fundamental to the belief and practice of it.

This is a faithful ſaying, πιστὸς λόγος, a credible ſaying, that which every man that truly underſtands the nature and deſign of religion will readily aſſent to.

And this I will that thou affirm conſtantly. He chargeth him to preach this upon all occaſions, leſt the doctrine of juſtification by faith and by grace, without any work of righteouſneſs preceding, ſhould be turned into licentiouſneſs, as it had been by ſome, and men ſhould falſely conclude, that becauſe works of righteouſneſs were not ne-ceſſary before juſtification, and to bring men into that ſtate, they were not neceſſary neither afterwards to our continuance in that ſtate.

The Apoſtle indeed did teach, that God did juſtify the ungodly, by the grace of the goſpel, and faith in Chriſt; that is, that thoſe who did ſincerely believe and embrace the goſpel, though they had been never ſo great ſinners before, were juſtified upon that faith; that is, all their former ſins were forgiven, and they were received into the favour of God. But though works of righteouſneſs were not neceſſary before their juſtification, yet they are neceſſary afterwards, becauſe the faith of the goſpel, and the embracing of Chriſtianity, doth imply a ſtipulation and engagement on our part, to live according to the laws and rules of the goſpel, which do ſtrictly injoin all kind of virtue and goodneſs. The covenant of baptiſm, by which we are entered into Chriſtianity, doth contain, on our part, not only a profeſſion of faith in Chriſt, but a ſolemn promiſe to deny ungodlineſs and worldly luſts, and to live ſoberly, and righteouſly, and godly in this preſent world. So that it is the greateſt miſtake in the world to think, that becauſe we are juſtified by faith, and the profeſſion of Chriſtianity, without works of righteouſneſs, therefore we are under no obligation to a good life: for faith in Chriſt, and the ſincere profeſſion of the Chriſtian religion, doth imply a good life, and an engagement to the practice of all virtue and goodneſs; which, if we do not perform and make good, we fail in our part of the covenant, and thereby forfeit all the bleſſings and benefits promiſed therein on God's part.

Therefore it is obſervable, that the Apoſtle, after he had ſpoken of our juſtification by grace, without works of righteouſneſs, gives this charge to Titus, to preſs the neceſſity of good works upon thoſe who did believe, and embrace the profeſſion of the goſpel, as it were on purpoſe to prevent all miſtake and abuſe of the doctrine of juſtification by faith, and the free grace and mercy of God in Jeſus Chriſt: ver. 5, 6, 7. Not by works of righteouſneſs which we have done; but according to his mercy he ſaved us, by the waſhing of regeneration, and the renewing newing of the Holy Ghoſt, which he ſhed on us abundantly through Jeſus Chriſt our Saviour; that is, by our ſolemn profeſſion of Chriſtianity at our baptiſm; that being juſtified by his grace, we ſhould be made heirs, according to the hope of eternal life. And then he adds, ver. 8. This is a faithful ſaying, and theſe things I will that thou affirm conſtantly, that they which have believed in God, might be careful to maintain good works; that is, that they who are thus juſtified by the faith of the goſpel, ſhould be ſo far from thinking themſelves hereby excuſed from good works, that they ſhould, upon this account, be more careful to maintain and practiſe them, becauſe, by the very profeſſion of the Chriſtian faith and religion, they have ſolemnly engaged themſelves ſo to do.

That they which believed in God; that is, who have taken upon them the profeſſion of Chriſtianity in their baptiſm. For it is not improbable, that the Apoſtle, having ſpoken of baptiſm juſt before, may, by this phraſe of believing in God, refer to that profeſſion of faith made in baptiſm, which began with theſe words, I believe in God; and then, they which have believed in God, are thoſe who, in baptiſm, have made a ſolemn profeſſion of Chriſtianity: as if he had ſaid, Theſe things I will that thou affirm conſtantly, that all that profeſs themſelves Chriſtians be careful to maintain good works. Or if, by the phraſe of believing in God, we will underſtand an aſſent to all divine revelations, more eſpecially that of the goſpel, and the Chriſtian religion, the moſt perfect that ever God made of his will to mankind, the matter will come much to the ſame iſſue.

Be careful to maintain good works. This phraſe ſeems, in the latter end of this epiſtle, to be uſed in a very reſtrained ſenſe; for labouring in an honeſt calling, ver. 14. Let ours alſo learn to maintain good works for neceſſary uſes, that they be not unfruitful. In the margin of your Bibles you will find it rendered, to profeſs honeſt trades: Let ours alſo learn to profeſs honeſt trades for neceſſary uſes, that is, for the ſupply of their neceſſities. But, in the text, it ſeems more agreeable to the ſcope of the Apoſtle's diſcourſe, to underſtand the phraſe of maintaining good works, for the practice of all Chriſtian virtues, eſpecially eſpecially thoſe which are more uſeful and beneficial to human ſociety ; among which diligence and induſtry in an honeſt calling, is none of the leaſt conſiderable, becauſe it follows, theſe things are good and profitable unto men. And indeed theſe are properly works of goodneſs, which redound to the publick benefit and advantage.

But good works may well be taken in a larger ſenſe, for all ſorts of virtuous actions. And ſo it is certainly uſed ſeveral times in this epiſtle, chap. i. 16. Unto every good work reprobate, ſpeaking of all profligate perſons who were loſt to all virtue and goodneſs. Chap. ii. 7. In all things ſhewing thyſelf a pattern of good works, that is, an example of all kind of virtue. And chap. iii. 1. Put them in mind to be ſubject to principalities and powers, to obey magiſtrates, and to be ready to every good work; that is, to the practice of all goodneſs, of whatſoever is honeſt and virtuous in itſelf, amiable and commendable in the ſight of others, uſeful and beneficial to any.

Having thus explained the words, I come now to conſider the two points contained in them.

Firſt, The certain truth and credibility of this ſaying or propoſition, That they which have believed in God, ought to be careful to maintain good works. This is a faithful ſaying; that is, a moſt evident and credible truth. And,

Secondly, The great fitneſs and neceſſity of inculcating this upon all Chriſtians, that the Chriſtian religion doth indiſpenſably require the virtues of a good life. Theſe things I will that thou affirm conſtantly, &c. I begin with the Firſt of theſe points, viz. The certain truth and evident credibility of this ſaying or propoſition, That they which have believed in God ſhould be careful to maintain good works. This is a faithful ſaying, πιστὸς λόγος, a ſaying worthy of credit, a moſt certain and credible truth. And it will appear to be ſo, whether we conſider the great end and deſign of religion in general, or of the Chriſtian religion in particular.

I. If we conſider the great end and deſign of religion in general, which is to make us happy, by poſſeſſing our minds with the belief of a God, and thoſe other principles which have a neceſſary connexion with that belief; and by obliging us to the obedience and practice of his laws.

1. By poſſeſſing our minds with the belief of a God, and of thoſe other principles which have a neceſſary connexion with it. Such are the belief of the divine perfections, of the infinite goodneſs, and wiſdom, and power, and truth, and juſtice, and purity of the divine nature; a firm perſuaſion of his providence, that he governs and adminiſters the affairs of the world, and takes notice of the actions of men, and will call them to an account for them; of the immortality of our ſouls, and their endleſs duration after death, and, conſequently, of the eternal rewards and puniſhments of another life. Theſe are the great principles of natural religion, which mankind are in ſome meaſure poſſeſſed with, and perſuaded of, without any external revelation from God; and theſe are neceſſary and fundamental to religion, as the Apoſtle to the Hebrews declares, Heb. xi. 6. Without faith it is impoſſible to pleaſe God; that is, there can be no ſuch thing as the practice of religion, without the belief of the principles of it; and what theſe are, he tells us in the next words: He that cometh to God muſt believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently ſeek him.

But then we muſt not reſt here, in the belief of a God and the principles of religion; for this faith is not required of us for itſelf, but in order to ſome farther end, which, if it be not attained by us, the mere belief of the principles of religion is to no purpoſe, neither acceptable to God, nor uſeful and beneficial to ourſelves. God would not have imprinted the notion of himſelf upon our nature, he would not have diſcovered himſelf to us, nor have required of us the belief of his being and providence, merely that we might know there is ſuch a being as God in the world, who made us and governs us; but that this belief might have its proper influence upon us, to oblige us to the obedience of his laws, which are the proper cauſes and means of our happineſs. It will not avail us at all, nor is it in the leaſt acceptable to God, for men to profeſs that they know him, when in works they deny him, being abominable and diſobedient, and to every good work

reprobate, as the Apoſtle deſcribes ſome, chap. i. 16. And therefore,

2. The great end and deſign of religion is, that our minds being poſſeſſed and prepared by the principles of religion, the belief of theſe ſhould have its proper influence upon us, which is effectually to oblige us to the obedience and practice of God's laws. Now, the laws which God hath given us to live by, as they are the rule and meaſure of our duty, by the performance whereof only we can hope to gain the favour of God, ſo they are the proper directions and means in order to our happineſs; they teach us both the conditions of our happineſs; and the proper qualification and diſpoſition for it.

Obedience to the laws of God is the condition of our happineſs, both temporal and eternal, both in this world and the other. The promiſes which God hath made of temporal felicity and bleſſings, are upon condition of our obedience to his laws; it is godlineſs only that hath the promiſe of this life, as well as of the other, 1 Tim. iv. 8. A truth ſo certain and evident, that the Apoſtle thought fit to add that ſolemn ſeal to it, which he prefaceth to the ſaying in the text, This is a faithful ſaying. And though God be pleaſed, out of his exceſſive goodneſs, to beſtow many temporal bleſſings and favours upon very bad men, that, by this goodneſs of his, he might lead them to repentance; yet God never made any promiſe of temporal bleſſings to wicked men; but, on the contrary, hath threatened them with great temporal evils and calamities; but all the promiſes, even of temporal good things, are made to the obeying of God's laws; to them that keep his covenant, and remember his commandments to do them.

And this is not only the condition upon which the promiſes of temporal bleſſings are ſuſpended, but generally, and for the moſt part, the natural cauſe and means of thoſe bleſſings; for there is no moral duty enjoined by God, no virtue, the practice whereof he requires from us, which does not naturally tend to our temporal felicity in this world; as temperance and chaſtity to that invaluable bleſſing of health, and to the preſervation of our eſtate, which is waſted by lewd and riotous living; humility and meekneſs to our quiet and ſafety ; juſtice and integrity to our reputation and honour, one of the chief inſtruments of temporal proſperity and ſucceſs. Kindneſs and charity, and a readineſs to do good to all men as we have opportunity, are in their nature apt to recommend us exceedingly to the love and eſteem of all men, and to their favourable regard and aſſiſtance, when we ſtand in need of it. And ſo I might inſtance in all other virtues, the ſincere practice whereof, though it be not, in all caſes, certain and infallible, yet it is the beſt and wiſeſt courſe that any man can take, to attain the greateſt happineſs which this world can afford, and to avoid the greateſt miſeries and calamities of it: as, on the contrary, there is no vice, no wicked practice, but is naturally productive of ſome great temporal miſchief and inconvenience.

And then the practice of virtue and goodneſs, as it is the abſolute and indiſpenſable condition of our future happineſs, in another world, ſo is it the neceſſary and only proper qualification for it, and the certain and infallible means of attaining it.

It is an abſolute and indiſpenſable condition of attaining it; and without this, it is in vain to hope for it. As God will certainly puniſh the tranſgreſſors of his laws, ſo nothing but obedience to them can pretend to his rewards: This God hath moſt expreſly declared, that without purity and holineſs no man ſhall ſee him ; that Chriſt is the author of eternal ſalvation only to them that obey him. And if God had not declared this in his word, the conſideration of God's eſſential holineſs and juſtice would ſufficiently aſſure us of it.

But beſides this, in the very nature and reaſon of the thing, holineſs and goodneſs is the neceſſary and only proper qualification for happineſs. Without the bleſſed ſight and enjoyment of God we cannot be happy, and holineſs and goodneſs can only qualify us for this. For happineſs is a ſtate which reſults from a temper and diſpoſition of mind ſuited to it; and where this is wanting, the man is no more capable of happineſs, than he that is ſick is of eaſe. Virtue and goodneſs are ſo eſſential to happineſs, that where theſe are not, there is no capacity of it. Theſe make us like to God, who is the fountain and pattern of all happineſs; and if we be not like to God, we can have no enjoyment of him. And a wicked man, if he could ſteal into heaven, into the ſight and preſence of God, would, from the temper and diſpoſition of his own mind, ſo unſuitable to that holy place and company, be extremely miſerable, even in the manſions of the bleſſed. Such a temper of mind, ſuch a polluted and guilty conſcience, as a ſinner carries with him out of this world, will accompany him, and remain with him in the other; and guilt is always reſtleſs and full of torment; and though God ſhould not puniſh it with any poſitive infliction of pain, would, of its own nature, make a man for ever miſerable. So that it is a vain dream and imagination, that any man, without the practice of holineſs and virtue in this life, can be happy in the other. A ſincere and thorough repentance of all our ſins, will indeed clear our conſciences of guilt, and by the mercy of God make us capable of happineſs; but it does this by changing our minds, and reconciling them to holineſs and goodneſs, in firm purpoſe and reſolution of a new life; and by changing our lives and actions too, if there be opportunity for it; but till this change be wrought, either in firm purpoſe, or in real effect, it is impoſſible we ſhould be happy. And though I will not deny, but this may be done by a deep repentance, and ſuch as God ſees would prove ſincere, in the laſt act of our lives; yet it is extreme madneſs, to run ſuch a hazard, becauſe we may be cut off from the opportunity of it; or if God ſhould afford us time and grace to that purpoſe, it is the hardeſt thing in the world to have any comfortable and well-grounded aſſurance of the ſincerity of it. So that very little hopes of heaven and happineſs can be given upon any other terms, than the general and conſtant courſe of a holy and virtuous life; and leaſt of all to thoſe who have all their life long reſolved to venture their everlaſting happineſs upon the infinite uncertainties of a deathbed-repentance at the laſt. But,

II. The truth of this propoſition, That they which have believed in God, ſhould be careful to maintain good works, or that faith and the virtues of a good life ought to go together; I ſay, the truth of this will yet be more evident, if we conſider the great end and deſign of of the Chriſtian religion in particular, which was to reform the world, to purify the hearts and lives of men from corrupt affections and wicked practices, to teach men to excel in all kinds of virtue and goodneſs.

And this is every where in the New Teſtament moſt expreſly declared. The great promiſe of bleſſedneſs is made to the virtues of meekneſs, and patience, and peaceableneſs, and purity, and righteouſneſs, as our Saviour expreſly teacheth in that excellent ſermon of his upon the mount, which is the ſummary of the Chriſtian religion. Eph. iv. 17, 18, &c. This I ſay therefore, and teſtify in the Lord, that ye henceforth, that is, now that ye have embraced Chriſtianity, walk not as other Gentiles walk, in the vanity of their mind, having the underſtanding darkened, being alienated from the life of God, through the ignorance that is in them, becauſe of the blindneſs of their heart: who being paſt feeling, have given themſelves over unto laſciviouſneſs, to work all uncleanneſs with greedineſs. But ye have not ſo learned Chriſt: if ſo be that ye have heard him, and have been taught by him, as the truth is in Jeſus: that ye put off, concerning the former converſation, the old man, which is corrupt, according to the deceitful luſts; and be renewed in the ſpirit of your mind; and that ye put on that new man, which after God is created in righteouſneſs and true holineſs. Wherefore putting away lying, ſpeak every man truth with his neighbour; for we are members one of another. Be ye angry and ſin not; let not the ſun go down upon your wrath, neither give place to the devil. Let him that ſtole, ſteal no more; but rather let him labour, working with his hands the thing which is good, that he may have to give to him that needeth. Let no corrupt communication proceed out of your mouth, but that which is good to the uſe of edifying; that it may miniſter grace unto the hearers. And grieve not the Holy Spirit of God, whereby ye are ſealed unto the day of redemption. Let all bitterneſs, and wrath, and anger, and clamour, and evil-ſpeaking, be put away from you, with all malice; and be ye kind one to another, &c. So that you ſee, that unleſs there be an univerſal reformation of heart and life, we have not ſo learned Chriſt as the truth is in Jeſus; we do not rightly underſtand the goſpel, and the tendency of the Chriſtian religion.

Gal. v. 22, 23, 24. But the fruits of the Spirit, of that ſpirit which the Chriſtian religion endows men withal, is love, joy, peace, long-ſuffering, gentleneſs, goodneſs, fidelity, meekneſs, temperance; and they that are Chriſt's, have crucified the fleſh, with the affections and luſts; that is, they that profeſs themſelves Chriſtians, are obliged to endeavour after all theſe virtues, and to put off the contrary luſts and vices. Phil. iv. 8. Finally, brethren, whatſoever things are true, whatſoever things are honeſt, whatſoever things are juſt, whatſoever things are pure, whatſoever things are lovely, whatſoever things are of good report; if there be any virtue, and if there be any praiſe, think on theſe things. St James likewiſe declares to the ſame purpoſe the genuine effect of Chriſtianity, which he calls the knowledge and wiſdom which is from above: Jam. iii. 13, 14, 15, 17. Who is a wiſe man, and endowed with knowledge among you? let him ſhew out of a good converſation his works with meekneſs of wiſdom. But if you have bitter envying and ſtrife in your hearts, glory not, and lie not againſt the truth. This wiſdom deſcendeth not from above; but is earthly, ſenſual, deviliſh. And the wiſdom that is from above, is firſt pure, then peaceable, gentle, and eaſy to be entreated, full of mercy and good fruits, without partiality, and without hypocriſy. To which I will add but one text more, which is the ſum and comprehenſion of all the reſt, and it is chap. ii. of this epiſtle to Titus, ver. 11. The grace of God, ſo he calls the doctrine of the goſpel, the grace of God, which brings ſalvation unto all men, hath appeared, teaching us, that, denying ungodlineſs, and worldly luſts, we ſhould live ſoberly, and righteouſly and godly in this preſent world.

I might proceed particularly to ſhew, that the whole diſpenſation and doctrine of the goſpel, and all the parts of them, are calculated to raiſe and exalt human nature to the higheſt pitch and perfection of virtue and goodneſs, and effectually to reform the ſpirits and lives of men.

The diſpenſation of the goſpel, or the Chriſtian religion, conſiſts in God's merciful condeſcenſion to ſend his own and only Son in our nature, to live among us, and to die for us. The doctrine of the goſpel conſiſts in the things to be believed, the duties to be practiſed by us; and the arguments and encouragements to the practice of thoſe duties. Now, I ſhall briefly ſhew, that the deſign of every part, both of the diſpenſation and doctrine of the goſpel, is to reform the minds and manners of men, and to engage them to the practice of all virtue and goodneſs. And,

I. For the diſpenſation of the goſpel, by which I mean the gracious method which the wiſdom of God hath pitched upon for the ſalvation and recovery of mankind, by ſending his only begotten Son into the world, in our nature, to live among us, and to die for us. So that the principal parts of this diſpenſation are theſe three:

1. His incarnation, or appearing in our nature.

2. His life.

3. His death and ſufferings for us. And I ſhall ſhew that the great deſign of all this was to reform mankind, and make them better.

1. For his incarnation. The great deſign of his coming into the world, and appearing in our nature, was this; and this was the reaſon of the name Jeſus, given him at his birth, as the angel tells us: Matth. i 21. His name ſhall be called Jeſus, for he ſhall ſave his people from their ſins. Matth. ix. 13. he himſelf tells us, that he came to call ſinners to repentance; that is, to reclaim them to a better and more virtuous courſe of life; and chap. xviii. 11. The Son of man is come to ſave that which was loſt, that is, to recover mankind from a ſtate of ſin and miſery, to a ſtate of holineſs and happineſs. And St Peter, exhorting the Jews to repentance, uſeth this argument, that for this very end God ſent him among them: Acts iii. 26. Unto you firſt, God ſent him to bleſs you, in turning away every one of you from his iniquity. Heb. ix 26. But now once in the end of the world, he hath appeared to aboliſh ſin, that is, to deſtroy both the guilt and power of ſin. 1 John iii. 5. Ye know that he was manifeſted to take away our ſins. And ver. 8. For this purpoſe the Son of God was manifeſted, to deſtroy the works of the devil.

2. This likewiſe was the great deſign of his life, of his dwelling and converſing with us ſo long, to teach us by his his doctrine in all holineſs and virtue, and to give us the perfect pattern and example of it in his life. For his doctrine, I have ſpoke of that by itſelf: but beſides that, one principal end of his living among us, was, that, in the courſe of his life, and all the actions of it, he might give us a perfect and familiar example of all holineſs and virtue, and therefore we are commanded to take him for our great pattern. Learn of me, ſaith he, for I am meek and lowly of ſpirit, Matth. xi. 29. John xiii. 15. after that great inſtance of his humility, in waſhing his diſciples feet, he adds, For I have given you an example, that ye ſhould do as I have done to you.

3. This alſo was the great deſign of his death and ſufferings. So the apoſtles every where teach: Gal. i. 4. ſpeaking of Chriſt, Who gave himſelf for our ſins, that he might deliver us from this preſent evil world, that is, that he might reſcue us from the vicious cuſtoms and practices of the world. 1 Pet. i. 18. Foraſmuch as ye know that ye were not redeemed with corruptible things, as ſilver and gold, from your vain converſation; but with the precious blood of Chriſt, as of a lamb without blemiſh and without ſpot! The death and ſufferings of Chriſt did not only make expiation for our ſins, but are propoſed to us as a pattern of mortification to ſin, and reſurrection to a new life, and a moſt powerful argument thereto. Rom. vi. 1, 2, 3, &c. and 2 Cor. v. 14, 15. ſpeaking of the love of Chriſt in laying down his life for us, For the love of Chriſt, ſaith he, conſtraineth us, becauſe we thus judge, that if one died for all, then were all dead: and that he died for all, that they which live, ſhould not henceforth live unto themſelves, but unto him which died for them. From whence he infers, ver. 17. Therefore, if any man be in Chriſt, he is a new creature: old things are paſſed away: behold, all things are become new. And, ver. 21. For he hath made him to be ſin for us, who knew no ſin, that we might be made the righteouſneſs of God in him; that is, he hath made him who was without ſin, a ſacrifice for our ſins, which ſhould be a ſtrong motive and argument to us, to endeavour after the righteouſneſs of God.

II. As the whole diſpenſation of the goſpel tends to this end, ſo more particularly does the doctrine of the goſpel, goſpel, and every part of it. Now, the whole doctrine of the goſpel may be referred to theſe three heads.

1. The things to be believed by us.

2. The duties to be practiſed. And,

3. The arguments and encouragements to the practice of theſe duties. And all theſe have a moſt direct and proper tendency to reform mankind, and effectually to engage us to the practice of all holineſs and virtue.

1. The matters of faith propoſed in the goſpel have a direct tendency to a good life, and immediate influence upon it. All the articles of our creed, and whatever the Chriſtian religion propoſeth to our belief concerning God the Father, the creator and governor of all things; and concerning Jeſus Chriſt our Lord and Saviour; and concerning the Holy Spirit of grace; the catholic church; the communion of ſaints; the reſurrection of the dead, and everlaſting life after death: all and each of theſe are ſo many arguments and reaſons, motives and encouragements, to a good life. In general, our hearts are ſaid to be purified by faith, Acts xv. 9. 1 Tim. i. 5. Faith is there reckoned among the principal ſources and fountains of a good life: The end of the commandment, (the word is παραγγελίας), the end of the goſpel-declaration is charity, out of a pure heart, and a good conſcience, and of faith unfeigned. So that a ſincere faith is the great principle of charity, which is the fulfilling of the law, and comprehends in it the duties of both tables. And here I might particularly ſhew, what influence the ſeveral articles of the Chriſtian faith have upon the practice of holineſs and virtue in our lives; but this would be too large a field of diſcourſe; and the thing is very plain and obvious to every man's conſideration; and therefore I ſhall content myſelf with what I have ſaid in general concerning the influence of faith upon a good life.

2. The duties enjoined by the Chriſtian religion do likewiſe tend more immediately to the ſame end and deſign; I mean the laws and precepts of the goſpel, which are nothing elſe but ſo many rules of good life, and in the main ſubſtance of them are the laws of nature cleared and perfected. For Chriſt came not to deſtroy the law, which was in force before; but to explain and clear it, where, through the corruption and degeneracy of mankind, it was grown obſcure and doubtful, and to perfect it by ſuperadding ſome rules and precepts of greater goodneſs and perfection, than ſeem to have been injoined by it: as to abſtain from all kind of revenge, to love our enemies, and not only to be ready to forgive them the greateſt injuries they have done us, but to do them the greateſt good, and even to be perfectly reconciled to them after the higheſt provocations, whenever they are in a meet capacity and diſpoſition for it. So that the precepts of the Chriſtian religion are a plain and perfect rule of all virtue and goodneſs, and the beſt and moſt abſolute ſyſtem of moral philoſophy that ever was in the world, containing all the rules of virtue and a good life, which are ſcattered and diſperſed in the writings of the philoſophers, and the wiſe men of all ages, and delivering them to us with greater clearneſs and certainty; in a more ſimple and unaffected manner, with greater authority, force, and efficacy upon their minds, than any philoſopher and lawgiver ever did; teaching us how to worſhip God in the beſt manner, and moſt ſuitable to his nature and perfections; how to demean ourſelves towards others with all meekneſs and humility, juſtice and integrity, kindneſs and charity, and how to govern ourſelves and our own unruly appetites and paſſions, and to bring them within the bounds of reaſon, much better than any law or inſtitution that ever was in the world; and all theſe duties and virtues ſtrictly commanded and injoined in the name and authority of God, by one evidently impowered and commiſſioned by him, and ſent from heaven on purpoſe to inſtruct us in the nature and practice of them. So that the doctrine of the goſpel, in reſpect of the laws and precepts of it, is a plain and perfect rule of a good life. And then,

3. The Chriſtian religion contains the moſt powerful arguments and encouragements to this purpoſe: and theſe are the threatenings and promiſes of the goſpel.

1. The terrible threatenings of eternal miſery and puniſhments to all the workers of iniquity, and wilful and impenitent tranſgreſſors of theſe laws. And this is an argument which taketh the faſteſt and ſureſt hold upon upon human nature, and will many times move and affect, when no other conſiderations will work upon us. Many men that could not be wrought upon by the love of God and goodneſs, nor by the hopes of everlaſting happineſs, have been affrighted and reclaimed from an evil courſe by the fear of hell and damnation, and the awe of a judgment to come. To think of lying under the terrible wrath and diſpleaſure of almighty God to eternal ages, of being extremely and for ever miſerable without intermiſſion, and without end, muſt needs be a very diſmal conſideration to any man that can think and conſider: For who knows the power of God's anger? who can dwell with everlaſting burnings? And yet to this horrible danger, to this intolerable miſery, do all the workers of iniquity, every one that lives in the wilful contempt and diſobedience of the laws of the goſpel, expoſe themſelves; and this is as expreſly revealed and declared to us, as it is poſſible for words to declare any thing: Matth. xiii. 40, 41, 42. So ſhall it be in the end of the world. The Son of man ſhall ſend forth his angels, and they ſhall gather out of his kingdom all things that offend, and them which do iniquity, and ſhall caſt them into a furnace of fire; there ſhall be wailing and gnaſhing of teeth. Matth. xxv. 41. there you have the very ſentence recorded which ſhall be pronounced upon ſinners at the great day: Then ſhall the King ſay to them on his left hand, that is, to the wicked, Depart, ye curſed, into everlaſting fire prepared for the devil and his angels. And ver. 46. Theſe ſhall go into everlaſting puniſhment. And this is that which St Paul tells us, renders the doctrine of the goſpel ſo powerful for the converſion and ſalvation of ſinners: Rom. i. 16. I am not aſhamed of the goſpel of Chriſt, becauſe it is the power of God to ſalvation, to every one that believeth, And ver. 18. For the wrath of God is revealed from heaven againſt all ungodlineſs and unrighteouſneſs of men. And chap. ii. 8, 9. To them that obey not the truth, but obey unrighteouſneſs, indignation and wrath, tribulation and anguiſh, upon every ſoul of man that doth evil. Eph. v. 6. Let no man deceive you with vain words; for becauſe of theſe things, viz. the ſins he had mentioned before, cometh the wrath of God upon the children of diſobedence. 2 Theſſ. i. 7, 8, 9.

8, 9. When the Lord Jeſus, ſpeaking of the judgment of the great day, ſhall be revealed from heaven with his mighty angels in flaming fire, taking vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the goſpel of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, who ſhall be puniſhed with everlaſting deſtruction from the preſence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power. So that the goſpel gives all imaginable diſcouragement to the tranſgreſſion and diſobedience of God's laws, by denunciation of the greateſt dread and terror that can be preſented to human nature, enough to make any ſenſible and conſiderate man willing to do or forbear any thing, to eſcape ſo horrible danger, to cut off a foot or a hand, or to pluck out an eye, not only to reſtrain nature in any thing, but even to offer violence to it, rather than to be caſt into hell-fire, where the worm dies not, and the fire is not quenched, as our Saviour expreſſeth it, Mark ix. 48. This is the firſt argument from the threatenings. The

2. Is from the promiſes of the goſpel, which are full of encouragement to obedience; and there are three great promiſes made in the goſpel to repentance, and the obedience of God's laws.

1. The promiſe of pardon and forgiveneſs.

2. Of grace and aſſiſtance.

3. Of eternal life and happineſs. And theſe certainly contain all the encouragement we can deſire; that God will pardon what is paſt, aſſiſt us in well-doing for the future, and reward our perſeverance in it to the end with eternal life; and all this is expreſly promiſed to us in the goſpel.

1. The pardon and forgiveneſs of ſins paſt: Acts xiii. 38, 39. Be it known unto you, therefore, men and brethren, that through this man is preached unto you the forgiveneſs of ſins: and by him all that believe are juſtified from all things, from which ye could not be juſtified by the law of Moſes. And this is a great encouragement to amendment, to be fully indemnified from all paſt ſins and tranſgreſſions; and this promiſe is made to believing, which includes in it repentance and a better courſe.

2. The promiſe of grace and aſſiſtance, to enable us to all the purpoſes of holineſs and obedience. And this our Saviour hath moſt expreſsly and emphatically promiſed miſed to all that are ſincerely reſolved to make uſe of it; and that upon the eaſieſt condition that can be, if we do but earneſtly pray to God for it, telling us that we may, with the ſame confidence and aſſurance of ſucceſs, (nay with much greater) aſk this of God, as we can any thing that is good, of the kindeſt father upon earth, Luke xi. 9. And ſurely here is a mighty encouragement to well-doing, to be aſſured that God is moſt ready to afford his grace and aſſiſtancc to us to this purpoſe, if we heartily beg it of him. So that neither the conſideration of our own weakneſs, nor of the power of our ſpiritual enemies, can be any diſcouragement or juſt excuſe to us from doing our duty, ſince God offers us ſo freely all the ſtrength that we need, and to endow us with an inward principle of well-doing, more powerful and effectual to all the purpoſes of holineſs and virtue, than any oppoſition that can be raiſed againſt it. So St John aſſures us, that we have God on our ſide, and the powerful aſſiſtance of his Holy Spirit, and therefore are ſure of victory in this conflict: 1 John iv. 4. Ye are of God, little children, and have overcome; becauſe greater is he that is in you, than he that is in the world. If the Spirit of God be more powerful than the devil, we are of the ſtronger ſide; and we have no juſt cauſe to complain of our inability and weakneſs to do the will of God, ſince that ſtrength and aſſiſtance which we may have for asking, is to all effects and purpoſes our own power. And therefore St Paul made no ſcruple to call it ſo, and to ſay, he was able to do all things: I am able to do all things through Chriſt which ſtrengtheneth me.

3. The promiſe of eternal life: and this is the great promiſe of the goſpel, and the crown of all the reſt: 1 John ii. 25. This is the promiſe that he hath promiſed us, even eternal life. And this is a reward ſo great and glorious, and ſo infinitely beyond the portion of our ſervice and obedience, that nothing can be more encouraging. What ſhould not men do in hopes of eternal life, which God, that cannot lie, hath promiſed to us? The expectation of ſuch a reward, ſo well aſſured to us, is ſufficient to encourage us to do our utmoſt, and to ſtrain all our powers for the ſecuring and attaining of it, which we cannot do without holineſs and obedience of life; for without holineſs no man ſhall ſee the Lord. So that all the promiſes of the goſpel are to encourage and ſtrengthen us in well-doing, to make us partakers of the divine nature, that we ſhould cleanſe ourſelves from all filthineſs, and perfect holineſs in the fear of God.

Thus you ſee that the whole diſpenſation of the goſpel, and the doctrines of it, and every part of them, are all calculated to reform the minds and manners of men. This is the great deſign of the Chriſtian religion, and all the parts and powers of it, to clear, and confirm, and perfect the natural law, to reinforce the obligation of moral duties by ſeverer threatenings, and greater promiſes, and to offer men more powerful grace and aſſiſtance to the practice of all goodneſs and virtue; and they do not underſtand the Chriſtian religion, who imagine any other end and deſign of it. There is nothing that our Saviour and his apoſtles do every where more vehemently declare, than that hearing and believing the doctrine of Chriſt ſignifies nothing, without the real virtues of a good life. Know, O vain man, that faith without works is dead, ſaith St James. For men to think that the mere belief of the goſpel, without the fruits and effects of a good life, will ſave them, is a very fond and vain imagination. And thus much may ſuffice to have ſpoken concerning the point.

SERMON CCVIII.

Of the neceſſity of good works.

Tit. iii 8.

This is a faithful ſaying, and theſe things I will that thou affirm conſtantly, that they which have believed in God, might be careful to maintain good works. Theſe things are good and profitable unto men.

The ſecond ſermon on this text.

FRom theſe words I have propoſed to handle theſe two points:

Firſt, The certain truth or credibility of this ſaying and propoſition, That they which have believed in God, ought to be careful to maintain good works. This I have ſpoken to, and come now to the Second, The great fitneſs and neceſſity of inculcating frequently upon all that profeſs themſelves Chriſtians, the indiſpenſable neceſſity of the practice of the virtues of a good life. In the handling of this point, I ſhall do theſe two things.

Firſt, I ſhall ſhew the great fitneſs and neceſſity of preſſing upon people the indiſpenſable neceſſity of the virtues of a good life. And,

Secondly, Anſwer an objection or two, to which the preaching of this kind of doctrine may ſeem liable. I begin with the Firſt of theſe, viz. to ſhew the great fitneſs and neceſſity of inculcating and preſſing upon all Chriſtians the indiſpenſable neceſſity of the virtues of a good life. And this will appear to be very fit and neceſſary upon theſe two accounts:

I. Becauſe men are ſo very apt to deceive themſelves in this matter, and ſo hardly brought to that wherein religion mainly conſiſts, viz. the practice of real goodneſs.

II. Becauſe

II. Becauſe of the indiſpenſable neceſſity of the thing, to render us capable of the divine favour and acceptance, and of the reward of eternal life and happineſs.

I. Becauſe men are ſo very apt to deceive themſelves in this matter, and ſo hardly brought to that wherein religion mainly conſiſts, viz. the practice of real goodneſs. They are extremely deſirous to reconcile, if it be poſſible, the hopes of eternal happineſs in another world, with a liberty to live as they liſt in this preſent world; they are loth to be at the trouble and drudgery of mortifying their luſts, and ſubduing and governing their paſſions, and bridling their tongues, and ordering their whole converſation aright, and practiſing all thoſe duties which are comprehended in thoſe two great commandments, the love of God and our neighbour. They would fain get into the favour of God, and make their calling and election ſure, by ſome eaſier way, than by giving all diligence, to add to their faith virtue, and knowledge, and temperance, and patience, and brotherly kindneſs, and charity.

The plain truth of the matter is, men had rather religion ſhould be any thing, than what indeed it is; the thwarting and croſſing of our vicious inclinations, the curing of our evil and corrupt affections; the due care and government nf our unruly appetites and paſſions, the ſincere endeavour and conſtant practice of all holineſs and virtue in our lives; and therefore they had much rather have ſomething that might handſomely palliate and excuſe their evil inclinations, than to extirpate them and cut them up; and rather than reform and amend their vicious lives, make God an honourable amends and compenſation for them in ſome other way.

This hath been the way and folly of mankind in all ages, to defeat the great end and deſign of religion, and to thruſt it by, by ſubſtituting ſomething elſe in the place of it, which they hope may ſerve the turn as well, and which hath the appearance of as much devotion and reſpect, and perhaps of more coſt and pains, than that which God requires of them. Men have ever been apt thus to impoſe upon themſelves, and to pleaſe themſelves with a conceit of pleaſing God full as well, or better, by ſome other way, than that which he hath pitched upon and appointed for them; not conſidering that God is a great King, and will be obſerved and obeyed by his creatures in his own way; and that obedience to what he commands is better and more acceptable to him, than any other ſacrifice that we can offer, which he hath not required at our hands; that he is infinitely wiſe and good, and therefore the laws and rules which he hath given us to live by, are more likely and certain means of our happineſs, than any inventions and devices of our own.

Thus, I ſay, it hath been in all ages. The old world, after that general deluge which God ſent to puniſh the raging wickedneſs and impiety of men, by ſweeping all mankind from off the face of the earth, excepting only one family, which was ſaved to be the ſeminary of a new and better race of men; I ſay, after this, the world, in a ſhort ſpace, fell off from the worſhip of the true God to the worſhip of idols and falſe gods; being unwilling to bring themſelves to a conformity and likeneſs to the true God, they choſe falſe gods like themſelves, ſuch as might not only excuſe, but even countenance and abet their lewd and vicious practices.

And when God had made a new revelation of himſelf to the nation of the Jews, and given them the chief heads and ſubſtance of the natural law, written over again with his own finger in tables of ſtone, and many other laws concerning religious worſhip, and their civil converſation, ſuited and adapted to their preſent temper and condition; yet how ſoon did their religion degenerate into external obſervances, purifications and waſhings, and a multitude of ſacrifices, without any great regard to the inward and ſubſtantial parts of religion, and the practice of thoſe moral duties and virtues, which were in the firſt place required of them, and without which all the reſt found no acceptance with God? Hence are thoſe frequent complaints in the Prophets, that their religion was degenerated into form and ceremony, into oblations and ſacrifices, the obſervance of faſts, and ſabbaths, and new moons; but had no power and efficacy upon their hearts and lives; was wholly deſtitute of inward purity and holineſs, of all ſubſtantial virtues, and the fruits of righteouſneſs in a good life. Thus God complains by the Prophet Iſaiah, chap. i. 11. &c. To what purpoſe is the multitude of your ſacrifices unto me? ſaith the Lord, Bring no more vain oblations. Incenſe is an abomination unto me: the new moons and ſabbaths, the calling of aſſemblies I cannot away with; it is iniquity, even the ſolemn meeting. Waſh ye, make you clean, put away the evil of your doings from before mine eyes. Ceaſe to do evil, learn to do well; ſeek judgment, relieve the oppreſſed, judge the fatherleſs, plead for the widow. Come now, and let us reaſon together, ſaith the Lord: Though your ſins be as ſcarlet, &c. Upon theſe terms, God declares himſelf ready to be reconciled to them, and to have mercy on them. But all their external ſervices and ſacrifices, ſeparated from real goodneſs and righteouſneſs, were ſo far from appeaſing God's wrath, that they did but increaſe the provocation. And to the ſame purpoſe, chap. lxvi. 2, 3. To this man will I look, even to him that is poor, and of a contrite ſpirit, and trembleth at my word. He that killeth an ox, is as if he ſlew a man: he that ſacrificeth a lamb, as if he cut off a dog's neck: he that offereth an oblation, as if he offered ſwines blood: he that burneth incenſe, as if he bleſſed an idol. Yea, they have choſen their own ways, and their ſoul delighted in their abomination. Jer. vi. 19, 20. Hear, O earth; behold, I will bring evil upon this people, even the fruit of their thoughts, becauſe they have not hearkened unto my words, nor to my law, but rejected it. To what purpoſe cometh there to me incenſe from Sheba? and the ſweet cane from a far country? Your burnt offerings are not acceptable, nor your ſacrifices ſweet unto me. They thought to pleaſe God with coſtly incenſe and ſacrifices, whilſt they rejected his law. And chap. vii. 4, 5, 6. Truſt ye not in lying words, ſaying, The temple of the Lord, the temple of the Lord, the temple of the Lord are theſe. For if ye throughly amend your ways and your doings; if ye throughly execute judgment between a man and his neighbour; if ye oppreſs not the ſtranger, the fatherleſs, and the widow, and ſhed not innocent blood in this place, neither walk after other gods to your hurt: then will I cauſe you to dwell in this place. And ver. 8, 9. 10. Behold, ye truſt in lying words that cannot profit. Will ye ſteal, murder, and commit adultery, and ſwear falſely, and burn incenſe unto Baal, and walk after other gods whom ye know not; and come and ſtand before me in this houſe, which is called by my name, and ſay, We are delivered to do all theſe abominations? This was to add impudence to all their other impieties; to think that the worſhip of God, and his holy temple, did excuſe theſe groſs crimes and immoralities. Micah vi. 6, 7, 8. there God repreſents the Jews, as deſirous to pleaſe God at any rate, provided their luſts and vices might be ſpared, and they might not be obliged to amend and reform their lives: Wherewith ſhall I come before the Lord, and bow myſelf before the high God? Shall I come before him with burnt-offerings, with calves of a year old? Will the Lord be pleaſed with thouſands of rams, or with ten thouſands of rivers of oil? ſhall I give my firſt-born for my tranſgreſſion, the fruit of my body for the ſin of my ſoul? All this they would willingly do: but all this will not do without real virtue and goodneſs. He hath ſhewed thee, O man, what is good; and what doth the Lord require of thee, but to do juſtly, and to love mercy, and to walk humbly with thy God?

And, in the time of our bleſſed Saviour, thoſe who pretended to be moſt devout among the Jews, were wholly buſied about their pretended traditions of waſhing of hands, and the outſides of their cups and diſhes, and about the external and leſſer things of the law, the tithing of mint, and aniſe, and cummin, and all manner of herbs, omitting, in the mean time, the weightier matters of the law, judgment, mercy, and faith, and the love of God, as our Saviour deſcribes their religion, Matth. xxiii. 23.

And after the clear revelation of the goſpel, the beſt and moſt perfect inſtitution that ever was, in the very beginning of Chriſtianity, what licentious doctrines did there creep in, turning the grace of God into laſciviouſneſs, and releaſing men from all moral duties, and the virtues of a good life? by reaſon whereof the way of truth was evil ſpoken of, as St Peter and St Jude expreſly tell us concerning the ſect of the Gnoſticks. And St John likewiſe deſcribes the ſame ſect by their arrogant pretences to extraordinary knowledge and illumination, whilſt they walk- ed in darkneſs, and allowed themſelves in all manner of wickedneſs of life; they pretended to perfection and righteouſneſs, without keeping the commandments of God.

And, in the next following age of Chriſtianity, how was it peſtered with a trifling controverſy about the time of the obſervation of Eaſter, and with endleſs diſputes and niceties about the doctrine of the Trinity, and the two natures and wills of Chriſt! by which means the practice of Chriſtianity was greatly neglected, and the main end and deſign of that excellent religion almoſt quite defeated and loſt.

After this, when the myſtery of iniquity began to ſhew itſelf, in the degeneracy of the Roman church from her primitive ſanctity and purity, and in the affectation of an undue and boundleſs power over other churches, the Chriſtian religion began to be over-run with ſuperſtition, and the primitive fervour of piety and devotion was turned into a fierce zeal and contention about matters of no moment and importance: of which we have a moſt remarkable inſtance here in our own nation, when Auſtin the monk arrived here to convert the nation, and preach the goſpel among us, as the church of Rome pretended; but againſt all faith and truth of hiſtory, which aſſures us that Chriſtianity was planted here among the Britons ſeveral ages before, and perhaps ſooner than even at Rome itſelf; and not only ſo, but had got conſiderable footing among the Saxons before Auſtin the monk ever ſet foot amongſt us: I ſay, when Auſtin the monk arrived here, the two great points of his Chriſtianity were, to bring the Britons to a conformity with the church of Rome in the time of Eaſter, and in the tonſure and ſhaving of the prieſts, after the manner of St Peter, as they pretended, upon the crown of the head, and not of St Paul, which was by ſhaving or cutting cloſe the hair of the whole head, as from ſome vain and fooliſh tradition he pretended to have learned: the promoting of theſe two cuſtoms was his great errand and buſineſs, and the zeal of his preaching was ſpent upon theſe two fundamental points; in which, after very barbarous and bloody doings, he at laſt prevailed. And this is the converſion of England, ſo much boaſted of by the church of Rome, and for which this Auſtin is magnified fied for ſo great a ſaint; when it is very evident, from the hiſtory of thoſe times, that he was a proud, ignorant, turbulent, and cruel man, who, inſtead of firſt converting the nation to the faith of Chriſt, confounded the purity and ſimplicity of the Chriſtian religion, which had been planted and eſtabliſhed among us long before.

In latter ages, when the man of ſin was grown up to his full ſtature, the great buſineſs of religion was the Pope's abſolute and univerſal authority over all Chriſtians, even Kings and Princes, in order to ſpiritual matters; eccleſiaſtical liberties and immunities; and the exemption of the clergy, and all matters belonging to them, from the cogniſance of the ſecular power; the great points which Tho. a Becket contended ſo earneſtly for, calling it the cauſe of Chriſt, and in the maintenance whereof he perſiſted to the death, and was canonized as a ſaint and a martyr. And among the people, their piety conſiſted in the promoting of monkery, and founding and endowing monaſteries: in infinite ſuperſtitions, fooliſh doctrines, and more abſurd miracles to confirm them; in purchaſing indulgences with money, and hearing of maſſes for the redemption of ſouls out of purgatory; in the idolatrous worſhip of ſaints, and their relicks and images, and eſpecially of the bleſſed Virgin, which at laſt grew to that height, as to make up the greateſt part of their worſhip and devotion, both publick and private. And indeed they have brought matters to that abſurd paſs, that one may truly ſay, that the whole buſineſs of their devotion is to teach men to worſhip images, and images to worſhip God. For to be preſent at divine ſervice and prayers celebrated in an unknown tongue, is not the worſhip of men and reaſonable creatures, but of ſtatues and images, which, tho' they be preſent in the place where this ſervice is performed, yet they bear no part in it, being void of all ſenſe and underſtanding of what is done. And, indeed, in their whole religion, ſuch as it is, they drive ſo ſtrict a bargain with God, and treat him in ſo arrogant a manner, by their inſolent doctrine of the merit of good works, as if God were as much beholden to them for their ſervice and obedience, as they are to him for the reward of it, which they challenge as of right and juſtice belonging to them. Nay, ſo high have they carried this doctrine, as to pretend not only to merit eternal life for themſelves, but to do a great deal more in works of ſupererogation, for the benefit and advantage of others; that is, when they have done as much as in ſtrict duty they are obliged to, and thereby paid down a valuable conſideration for heaven, and as much as in equal juſtice between God and man it is worth, the ſurpluſage of their good works they put as a debt upon God, and as ſo many bills of credit laid up in the treaſury of the church, which the Pope, by his pardons and indulgences, may diſpenſe and place to whoſe account he pleaſeth. And thus, by one device or other, they have enervated the Chriſtian religion to that degree, that it hath quite loſt its virtue and efficacy upon the hearts and lives of men; and inſtead of the fruits of real goodneſs and righteouſneſs, it produceth little elſe but ſuperſtition and folly; or if it bring forth any fruits of charity, it is either ſo miſplaced upon theſe chimeras, (as hiring of prieſts to ſay ſo many maſſes for the dead, to redeem their ſouls out of purgatory), that it ſignifies nothing; or elſe the virtue of it is ſpoiled by the arrogant pretence of meriting by it. So apt have men always been to deceive themſelves by an affected miſtake of any thing for religion, but that which really and in truth is ſo. And this is that which the Apoſtle St Paul foretold would be the great miſcarriage of the laſt times, that, under a great pretence of religion, men ſhould be deſtitute of all goodneſs, and abandoned to all wickedneſs and vice, having a form of godlineſs, but denying the power of it, 2 Tim. iii. 5.

And though things have been much better ſince that happy reformation from the corruptions and errors of Popery, yet, even among Proteſtants, the malice and craft of the devil hath prevailed ſo far, as to undermine, in a great meaſure, the neceſſity of a good life, by thoſe luſcious doctrines of the Antinomians, concerning free grace, and the juſtification of a ſinner, merely upon a confident perſuaſion of his being in a ſtate of grace and favour with God, and, conſequently, that the goſpel diſchargeth men from obedience to the laws of God, and all manner of obligation to the virtues of a good life; which doctrines, how falſe and abſurd ſoever in themſelves, and pernicious

in their conſequences, did not only prevail very much in Germany, a little after the beginning of the reformation, but have ſince got too much footing in other places, and been too far entertained and cheriſhed by ſome good men, who were not ſufficiently aware of the error and danger of them. But, bleſſed be God, the doctrine of our church, both in the articles and homilies of it, hath been preſerved pure and free from all error and corruption in this matter on either hand, aſſerting the neceſſity of good works, and yet renouncing the merit of them in that arrogant ſenſe in which the church of Rome does teach and aſſert it; and ſo teaching juſtification by faith, and the free grace of God in Jeſus Chriſt, as to maintain the indiſpenſable neceſſity of the virtues of a good life.

And thus I have done with the firſt reaſon, why it is ſo fit and neceſſary to preſs frequently upon Chriſtians the indiſpenſable neceſſity of the virtues of a good life, viz. becauſe men are and have ever been ſo very apt to deceive themſelves in this matter, and ſo hardly brought to that wherein religion mainly conſiſts, viz. the practice of real goodneſs. I ſhall be brief upon the II. reaſon, namely, becauſe of the indiſpenſable neceſſity of the thing to render us capable of the divine favour and acceptance, and of the reward of eternal life. And this added to the former, makes the reaſon full and ſtrong. For if men be ſo apt to deceive themſelves in this matter, and to be deceived in it be a matter of ſuch dangerous conſequence, then it is highly neceſſary to inculcate this frequently upon Chriſtians, that no man may be miſtaken in a matter of ſo much danger, and upon which his eternal happineſs depends. Now, if obedience to the laws of God, and the practice of virtue and good works, be neceſſary to our continuance in a ſtate of grace and favour with God, and to our final juſtification by our abſolution at the great day; if nothing but holineſs and obedience can qualify us for the bleſſed ſight of God, and the glorious reward of eternal happineſs; then it is matter of infinite conſequence to us, not to be miſtaken in a matter of ſo great importance; but that we work out our ſalvation with fear and trembling, and give all diligence to make our calling and election ſure, by adding to our faith and knowledge, the virtues of a good life; that, by patient continuance in well-doing, we ſeek for glory, and honour, and immortality, and eternal life: and that we ſo demean ourſelves in all holy converſation and godlineſs, as that we may with comfort and confidence wait for the bleſſed hope, and the glorious appearance of the great God, and our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt; who gave himſelf for us, that he might redeem us from all iniquity, and purify to himſelf a peculiar people zealous of good works. That this is indiſpenſably neceſſary to our happineſs, I have, in my former diſcourſe, ſhewed at large, from the great end and deſign of religion in general, and of the Chriſtian religion in particular; from the whole deſign and doctrine of the goſpel; from the conſtant tenor of the Bible; and from the nature and reaſon of the thing.

I know it hath been the great deſign of the devil and his inſtruments, in all ages, to undermine religion, by making an unhappy ſeparation and divorce between godlineſs and morality, between faith and the virtues of a good life; and, by this means, not only to weaken and abate, but even wholly to deſtroy the force and efficacy of the Chriſtian religion, and to leave men as much under the power of the devil and their luſts, as if there were no ſuch thing as Chriſtianity in the world. But let us not deceive ourſelves; this was always religion, and the condition of our acceptance with God, to endeavour to be like God in purity and holineſs, in juſtice and righteouſneſs, in mercy and goodneſs, to ceaſe to do evil, and to learn to do well. And this you will find to be the conſtant doctrine of the holy ſcriptures, from the beginning of the Bible to the end. Gen. iv. 7. If thou doſt well, ſhalt thou not be accepted? Pſal. xv. 1, 2. Lord, who ſhall abide in thy tabernacle? who ſhall dwell upon thy holy hill? He that walketh uprightly, and worketh righteouſneſs, and ſpeaketh the truth from his heart. Pſal. l. 23. To him that ordereth his converſation aright, will I ſhew the ſalvation of God. Iſ. i. 16, 17, 18. Waſh ye, make you clean, put away the evil of your doings from before mine eyes, ceaſe to do evil, learn to do well, ſeek judgment, relieve the oppreſſed, judge the fatherleſs, plead for the widow. Come now, and let us reaſon together,

ſaith the Lord, Though your ſins be as ſcarlet, they ſhall be as white as ſnow. Iſ. iii. 10, 11. Say ye to the righteous, that it ſhall be well with him: for they ſhall eat the fruit of their doings. Wo unto the wicked, it ſhall be ill with him: for the reward of his hands ſhall be given him. Micah vi. 8. He hath ſhewed thee, O man, what is good; and what doth the Lord require of thee, but to do juſtly, to love mercy, and to walk humbly with thy God?

And our bleſſed Saviour, in his ſermon upon the mount, tells us plainly what manner of perſons we muſt be, if ever we hope to be happy, and to enter into the kingdom of God; and wherein his religion conſiſts, in righteouſneſs, and purity, and meekneſs, and patience, and peaceableneſs: and declares moſt expreſly, that if we hope for happineſs upon any other terms than the practice of theſe virtues, we build upon the ſand. Acts x. 34. Of a truth I perceive, ſays St Peter there, that God is no reſpecter of perſons; but in every nation, he that feareth God, and worketh righteouſneſs, is accepted with him. Gal. vi. 7, 8. Be not deceived, God is not mocked: for whatſoever a man ſoweth, that ſhall he alſo reap. For he that ſoweth to the fleſh, ſhall of the fleſh reap corruption; but he that ſoweth to the ſpirit, ſhall of the ſpirit reap life everlaſting. Eph. v. 6. Let no man deceive you with vain words: for becauſe of theſe things cometh the wrath of God upon the children of diſobedience. 1 John iii. 7. Little children, let no man deceive you. He that doth righteouſneſs is righteous, even as he is righteous. And here, in the text, This is a faithful ſaying, &c. Theſe things are good and profitable to men, acceptable to God, and honourable to religion, and the only way and means to eternal life, through the mercy and merits of Jeſus Chriſt our bleſſed Lord and Saviour.

SER.

SERMON CCIX.

Of the neceſſity of good works.

TIT. iii. 8.

This is a faithful ſaying, and theſe things I will that thou affirm conſtantly, that they which have believed in God, might be careful to maintain good works. Theſe things are good and profitable unto men.

The third ſermon on this text.

I Come now to the ſecond thing I propoſed, which was to anſwer an objection or two, to which the preaching of this kind of doctrine may ſeem liable.

Firſt, That this is to advance and ſet up morality.

Secondly, That this ſeems to contradict St Paul's doctrine of juſtification by the free grace of God in Jeſus Chriſt, and by faith without the works of the law. I ſhall endeavour to anſwer both theſe.

Firſt, That this is to advance and ſet up morality. To which I anſwer two things.

I. That if by morality men mean countefeit virtue, and the ſpecious ſhew of juſtice, and charity, and meekneſs, or any other virtue, without the truth and reality of them, without an inward principle of love to God and goodneſs, out of oſtentation and vain-glory, or for ſome other by and ſiniſter end, ſuch as probably were the virtues of many Heathens, and it is to be feared of too many Chriſtians; if this be that which the objectors mean by morality, then we do aſſure them that we preach up no ſuch morality, but thoſe virtues only which are ſincere, and ſubſtantial, and real, the principle and root whereof is the love of God and goodneſs, and the end, the honour and glory of God, and a neceſſary ingredient whereof is ſincerity and truth. It is righteouſneſs and true holineſs, the ſincere love of God and our neighbour, real meekneſs, and patience, and humility, and ſobriety, and chaſtity, and not the glittering ſhew and appearance, the vain and affected oſtentation of any of theſe virtues, which we perſuade and preſs men ſo earneſtly to endeavour after.

Not that I believe that all virtues of the Heathen were counterfeit and deſtitute of an inward principle of goodneſs: God forbid that we ſhould paſs ſo hard a judgment upon thoſe excellent men, Socrates, and Epictetus, and Antoninus, and ſeveral others, who ſincerely endeavoured to live up to the light and law of nature, and took ſo much pains to cultivate and raiſe their minds, to govern and ſubdue the irregularity of their ſenſual appetites and brutiſh paſſions, to purify and refine their manners, and to excel in all virtue and goodneſs. Theſe were glorious lights in thoſe dark times, and ſo much the better for being good under ſo many diſadvantages, as the ignorance and prejudice of their education, the multitude of evil examples continually in their view, and the powerful temptation of the contrary cuſtoms and faſhions of the generality of mankind.

Nor were they wholly deſtitute of an inward principle of goodneſs; for though they had not that powerful grace and aſſiſtance of God's Holy Spirit which is promiſed and afforded to all ſincere Chriſtians, (as neither had the Jews, who were the peculiar people of God, and in covenant with him), yet it is very credible, that ſuch perſons were under a ſpecial care and providence of God, and not wholly deſtitute of divine aſſiſtance, no more than Job and his friends, mentioned in the Old Teſtament, and Cornelius in the New, who ſurely were very good men, and accepted of God, though they were Gentiles, and aliens from the commonwealth of Iſrael, and ſtrangers from the covenant of promiſe; but yet not excluded from the bleſſing of the Meſſias, though they were ignorant of him, as many of the Jews likewiſe were, nor from the benefit of that great propitiation, which, in the fulneſs of time, he was to make for the ſins of the whole world.

So that there is no need ſo uncharitably to conciude, (as ſome of the ancients have done, not all, nor the moſt ancient of them neither), that there were no good men among mong the Heathen, and that the brighteſt of their virtues were counterfeit, and only in ſhew and appearance. For there might be ſeveral good men among the Gentiles, in the ſame condition that Cornelius was before he became a Chriſtian: of whom it is ſaid, whilſt he was yet a Gentile, that he was a devout man, and feared God, and that his prayer and his alms were accepted of God, a certain ſign that they were not counterfeit. And if he had died in that condition, before Chriſt had been revealed to him, I do not ſee what reaſonable cauſe of doubt there can be concerning his ſalvation; and yet it is a moſt certain and inviolable truth, that there is no other name under heaven given among men, whereby we muſt be ſaved, but the name of Jeſus; neither is there ſalvation in any other. And good men in all ages and nations from the beginning of the world, both before the law, and under the law, and without the law, ſuch as feared God and wrought righteouſneſs, were accepted of him in that name, and by the meritorious ſacrifice of that Lamb of God, which, in reſpect of the virtue and efficacy of it, is ſaid to have been ſlain from the foundation of the world.

II. But if by moral virtues be meant thoſe which concern the manners of men, from whence they ſeem to have taken their name, and which are in truth the duties commanded and enjoined by the natural or moral law, and are comprehended under thoſe two great commands, as our bleſſed Saviour calls them, the love of God and our neighbour: I ſay, if this be the meaning of it, then we do advance this kind of morality, as that which is the primary and ſubſtantial part of all religion, and moſt ſtrictly enjoined by the Chriſtian. To which purpoſe our Saviour tells us. Matth. v. 17. that he was not come to deſtroy the law and the prophets, but to fulfil them. And ver. 19. Whoſoever therefore ſhall break one of the leaſt of theſe commandments, and teach men ſo, ſhall be called the leaſt in the kingdom of heaven; but whoſoever ſhall do and teach them, ſhall be called great in the kingdom of heaven; that is, under the diſpenſation of the goſpel. So that this is a principal part of the Chriſtian religion, to teach and practiſe the duties of the moral law. This the Phariſees were defective in, placing their religion in external and little things, but neglecting the great great duties of morality, the weightier matters of the law, mercy, and judgment, and fidelity, and the love of God. And therefore he adds, verſe 20. I ſay unto you, Except your righteouſneſs exceed the righteouſneſs of the Scribes and Phariſees, ye ſhall in no caſe enter into the kingdom of heaven. It is not poſſible, in more expreſs and emphatical words, to injoin the obſervation of the duties of the moral law. And then, for that great principle and rule of moral juſtice, To do to all men, as we would have them to do to us; our Saviour injoins it as an eſſential part of religion, and the ſum and ſubſtance of our whole duty to our neighbour, and of all the particular precepts contained in the law and the prophets, Matth. vii. 12. Therefore, all things whatſoever ye would that men ſhould do to you, do ye even ſo to them: for this is the law and the prophets. And St Paul moſt expreſly declares, that he was ſo far from weakening or making void the obligation of the law, by his doctrine of juſtification by faith, that he did thereby confirm and eſtabliſh it: Rom. iii. 31. Do we then make void the law thro' faith? God forbid: yea, we eſtabliſh the law.

So that moral duties and virtues are the ſame with Chriſtian graces, and with that holineſs and righteouſneſs which the goſpel requires, and differ only in name and notion. They are called virtues, with relation to the intrinſical nature and goodneſs of them; and graces, with reſpect to the principle from which they flow, being the fruits and effects of the gracious operation of the Spirit of God upon our minds. And it hath been a very ill ſervice to religion, to decry morality, as ſome have done, not conſidering that moral duties are of primary obligation, and bound upon us by the law of nature; and that Chriſtianity hath reinforced and ſeconded the obligation of them by more powerful motives and encouragements. But I proceed to the Second objection, viz. That this diſcourſe ſeems to be contrary to St Paul's doctrine of juſtification by the free grace of God in Jeſus Chriſt, by faith, without the works of the law.

To which I anſwer, That St Paul, when he does ſo vehemently and frequently aſſert juſtification by the free grace of God, and by faith, without the works of the law, does not thereby exclude the neceſſity of works of righteouſneſs and obedience to the moral precepts of the goſpel, as the condition of our continuance in the favour of God, and of our final and perfect juſtification and abſolution by the ſentence of the great day; but, on the contrary, does every where declare the neceſſity of a holy and virtuous life to this purpoſe. And this is moſt plainly the tenor and current of his doctrine throughout all his epiſtles. But, whenever he contends that we are juſtified by faith without works, he denies one of theſe three things:

1. That the obſervation of the law of Moſes is neceſſary to our juſtification and ſalvation. And this he does in oppoſition to thoſe who troubled the Chriſtian church, by teaching, that it was ſtill neceſſary to Chriſtians to keep the law of Moſes; and that, unleſs they did ſo, they could not be ſaved; of which we have a full account given, Acts xv. And this, for the moſt part, is the meaning of that aſſertion, ſo frequent in his epiſtles to the Romans and the Galatians, that we are not juſtified by the works of the law, but by the faith of Chriſt. And this is very evident from the tenor of his reaſoning about this matter, in which he does ſo frequently urge this argument, and inſiſt ſo ſtrongly upon it, viz. That men were juſtified before the law of Moſes was given, for which he inſtances in Abraham, and, therefore, the obſervance of that law cannot be neceſſary to a man's juſtification and ſalvation.

2. Sometimes he, in his diſcourſe upon this argument, denies the merit of any works of obedience and righteouſneſs, to gain the favour and acceptance of God; ſo that we cannot challenge any thing of God as of debt, and as a ground of boaſting, but we owe all to the free grace and mercy of God; and, when we have done our beſt, have done but our duty. And this he likewiſe frequently inſiſts upon in his epiſtle to the Romans, in oppoſition to an arrogant opinion, common among the Jews, of the merit of good works, and that God was indebted to them for their obedience. In this ſenſe, he ſays, Rom. iv. 4. Now to him that worketh is the reward reckoned, not of grace, but of debt; that is, he that claims juſtification, and the reward of eternal life, as due to him for his obedience, dience, does not aſcribe it to the free grace of God, but challengeth it as a debt due to him.

3. Sometimes he denies the neceſſity of any works of righteouſneſs, antecedently to our firſt juſtification, and being received into a ſtate of grace and favour with God; and aſſerts, on the contrary, that, by the faith of Chriſt, and ſincerely embracing the Chriſtian religon, men are juſtified: and though they were never ſo great ſinners before, all their paſt ſins are forgiven, and God is perfectly reconciled to them. In which ſenſe, he ſays, chap. iv. 5. That God juſtifies the ungodly, upon their believing. So that, whatever ſins they were guilty of before, and tho' they never did any one good action in their lives, yet, if they ſincerely embrace the Chriſtian religion, and thereby engage themſelves to reform their lives, and to obey the precepts of the goſpel for the future, God will thereupon receive them into his favour, and pardon the ſins of their former lives. And in this epiſtle to Titus, chap. iii. 5, 7. immediately before the text, Not by works of righteouſneſs which we have done, but according to his mercy, he ſaved us, by the waſhing of regeneration, and by the renewing of the Holy Ghoſt; that, being juſtified by his grace, we ſhould be made heirs, according to the hope of eternal life; that is, though their former life had been very bad, as he deſcribes it before, verſe 3. For we ourſelves were ſometimes fooliſh, diſobedient, ſerving divers luſts and pleaſures, living in malice, and envy, and hatred of one another; I ſay, notwithſtanding this, tho' they had done no works of righteouſneſs, but the contrary, yet, upon their ſolemn profeſſion of Chriſtianity at their baptiſm, and declaration of their repentance, and engagements to live better, they were juſtified freely by God's grace, and ſaved by his mercy. But then he does not ſay, that, after this ſolemn profeſſion of Chriſtianity, works of righteouſneſs were not neceſſary, to continue them in this ſtate of grace and favour with God, but quite contrary; he plainly declares the neceſſity of them, in the very next words: This is a faithful ſaying, &c.

And the conſideration of this will fully reconcile the ſeeming difference between St Paul and St James, in this matter of juſtification. St Paul affirms, that a ſinner is at firſt juſtified, and received into the favour of God, by a ſincere profeſſion of the Chriſtian faith, without any works of righteouſneſs preceeding. St James affirms, that no man continues in a juſtified ſtate, and in favour with God, whoſe faith doth not bring forth good works; and that it is not a true and lively faith, which doth not approve and ſhew itſelf to be ſo, by the works of obedience and a good life: James ii. 14. What doth it profit a man, my brethren, if a man ſay that he hath faith, and hath not works; can faith ſave him? And, verſe 17. Faith, if it hath not works, is dead, being alone. And, verſe 20. he repeats it again, Know, O vain man, that faith without works is dead. And, verſe 22. ſpeaking of Abraham, Seeſt thou how faith wrought with his works, and by works was faith made perfect. And, verſe 26. For as the body without the ſpirit is dead, ſo faith without works is dead alſo. The ſum and reſult of all which is this, that, though we be juſtified at firſt by faith, without works preceeding, yet faith, without good works following it, will not finally juſtify and ſave us; nay, indeed, that faith which does not bring forth the fruits of a good life, was never a true, and living, and perfect faith; but pretended, and dead, and imperfect, and, therefore, can juſtify no man; and he that hath only ſuch a faith, does but make an empty and ineffectual profeſſion, but is really deſtitute of the true faith of the goſpel.

And this is agreeable to that explication which was given by our firſt reformers here in England, of the nature of juſtifying faith; "That it is not a mere per-
"ſuaſion of the truths of natural and revealed religion, "but ſuch a belief as begets a ſubmiſſion to the will of "God, and hath hope, love, and obedience to God's "commandments joined to it. That this is the faith
"which in baptiſm is profeſſed, from which Chriſtians
"are called the faithful; and that, in thoſe ſcriptures,
"where it is ſaid, We are juſtified by faith, we may not "think that we be juſtified by faith, as it is a ſeparate
"virtue from hope and charity, the fear of God, and re"pentance, but by it is meant faith, neither only nor a"lone, but with the foreſaid virtues, containing an en"gagement of obedience to the whole doctrine and reli" gion of Chriſt. And that although all that are juſti-

" fied, muſt of neceſſity have charity, as well as faith, yet
" neither faith nor charity are the worthineſs and merit " of our juſtification, but that is to be aſcribed only to
" our Saviour, Chriſt, who was offered upon the croſs
" for our ſins, and roſe again for our juſtification;" as may be ſeen more at large in a treatiſe publiſhed at the beginning of our reformation, upon this and ſome other points. And I do not ſee what can be ſaid upon this point with more clearneſs and weight.

All the application I ſhall make of this diſcourſe ſhall be briefly this; that, if we be convinced of the neceſſity of the virtues of a good life to all that profeſs themſelves Chriſtians, we would ſeriouſly and in good earneſt ſet about the practice of them; if this be a faithful ſaying, then I am ſure it greatly concerns us to be careful of our lives and actions, and that our converſation be as becometh the goſpel of Chriſt; becauſe, if this be true, there is no poſſible way to reconcile a wicked life, no, nor a wilful neglect and violation of any of the duties and laws of Chriſtianity, with the hopes of heaven and eternal life. In this the ſcripture is poſitive and peremptory, that every man that hath this hope in him, muſt purify himſelf, even as he is pure: that, without holineſs, no man ſhall ſee the Lord: but, if we have our fruit unto holineſs, our end ſhall be everlaſting life.

And here I might particularly recommend, to your careful practice, the great virtues of Chriſtianity; thoſe which St Paul tells us are the proper and genuine fruits of the ſpirit of Chriſt, love, joy, peace, long ſuffering, gentleneſs, goodneſs, fidelity, meekneſs, temperance. But I have not time to inſiſt particularly upon them I ſhall content myſelf briefly to mention thoſe duties which the Apoſtle, in this epiſtle, doth more eſpecially preſs upon the ſeveral conditions and relations of men. Thoſe who are teachers and inſtructors of others, that they would not only be careful to preach ſound doctrine, but in all things to ſhew themſelves patterns of good works. Thoſe who are ſubject to others, and under their government, that they would pay all duty and obedience to their ſuperiors, as children to their parents, ſervants to their maſters, that they may adorn the doctrine of God our Saviour in all things, as the Apoſtle ſpeaks, chap. ii. verſe 10. And ſo likewiſe thoſe who are ſubjects, that they live in all peaceable and humble obedience to princes and magiſtrates. This our Apoſtle ſpeaks of as a great duty of Chriſtian religion, and reckons it among good works, chap. iii. 1. Put them in mind to be ſubject to principalities and powers, and to obey magiſtrates, and to be ready to every good work.

And then thoſe who are of an inferior condition, that they labour and be diligent in the work of an honeſt calling, for this is privately good and profitable unto men, and to their families; and thoſe who are above this neceſſity, and are in a better capacity to maintain good works, properly ſo called, works of piety, and charity, and juſtice, that they be careful to promote and advance them, according to their power and opportunity, becauſe theſe things are publickly good and beneficial to mankind. And, beſides this, as St Peter exhorts, 2 Peter i. 5, 6, &c. And beſides this, giving all diligence, add to your faith, virtue; and to virtue, knowledge; and to knowledge temperance; and to temperance, patience; and to patience, godlineſs; and to godlineſs brotherly kindneſs; and to brotherly kindneſs, charity. For if theſe things be in you, and abound, they make you that you ſhall neither be barren, nor unfruitful in the knowledge of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt. But he that lacketh theſe things is blind, and cannot ſee afar off, and hath forgotten that he was purged from his old ſins; that is, doth not conſider that the deſign of Chriſtianity is to renew and reform the hearts and lives of men. Wherefore, the rather, brethren, as he goes on, give diligence to make your calling and election ſure; for if ye do theſe things ye ſhall never fall. For ſo an entrance ſhall be miniſtred unto you abundantly into the everlaſting kingdom of our Lord and Saviour Jeſus Chriſt.

I will conclude all with that excellent ſaying of St Paul in this epiſtle to Titus, which ſo fully declares to us the great deſign, and the proper efficacy of the Chriſtian doctrine upon the minds and manners of men; chap. ii. 11, 12, 13. For the grace of God, that bringeth ſalvation, hath appeared to all men, teaching us, that, denying ungodlineſs and worldly luſts, we ſhould live ſoberly, righteouſly, ously, and godly, in this present world; looking for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearance of the great God and our Saviour Jesus Christ.

To whom, with the Father, and the Holy Ghost, be all glory and honour, now and for ever. Amen.

SERMON CCX.

Of doing all to the glory of God.

1 COR. X. 31.

Whether therefore ye eat or drink, or whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God.

THese words are a general conclusion inferred from a particular case, which the Apostle had been discoursing of before; and that we may the better understand the meaning of this general rule, it will not be amiss to look back a little upon the particular case the Apostle was speaking of; and that was concerning the partaking of things offered to idols; and that in two cases; either by partaking of the idol-feasts in their temples, after the sacrifices; or, by partaking of things offered to idols, whether they were bought by Christians in the market, or set before them at a private entertainment, to which, by some heathens, they were invited.

The first he condemns as absolutely unlawful: the other, not as unlawful in itself, but in some circumstances, upon the account of scandal.

The first case he speaks of from verse 14. to 23. Wherefore, my beloved brethren, flee from idolatry. I speak to wise men: judge ye what I say. As if he had said, You may easily apprehend what it is I am going to caution you against. And first, he tells them in general, that they who communicated in the worship of any deity, or in any kind of sacrifice offered to him, did, in so doing, ing, own and acknowledge that for a deity. To this purpose, he inſtanceth in communicating in the Chriſtian ſacrament, and in the Jewiſh ſacrifices: verſe 16, 17, 18. The cup of bleſſing which we bleſs, is it not the communion of the blood of Chriſt? The bread which we break, is it not the communion of the body of Chriſt? For we, being many, are one bread and one body; for we are all partakers of that one bread. Behold Iſrael after the fleſh: that is, the Jews: are not they which eat of the ſacrifices, partakers of the altar? Thus it is in the Chriſtian and the Jewiſh worſhip. And the caſe is the ſame, if any man partake of the idol-feaſts in their temples. This he does not expreſs, but takes it for granted they underſtood what this diſcourſe aimed at.

And then he anſwers an argument, which it ſeems was made uſe of by ſome, particularly the Gnoſticks, of whom the Apoſtle ſpeaks, chap. viii. and that was this. If an idol be nothing, and, conſequently, things ſacrificed to idols were not to be conſidered as ſacrifices, then it was lawful to partake of the idol-feaſts, which were celebrated in their temples. And that the Apoſtle ſpeaks of theſe, is plain from his diſcourſe againſt the Gnoſticks, who made uſe of this argument for the lawfulneſs of communicating at the idol-feaſts: chap. viii. 4. As concerning, therefore, the eating of things which are offered in ſacrifice unto idols; we know that an idol is nothing in the world, &c. And, verſe 10. If any man ſee thee which haſt knowledge, alluding to the very name of Gnoſticks, if any man ſee thee which haſt knowledge, ſit at meat in an idol-temple.

This then is that partaking of idol-feaſts, which the Apoſtle here ſpeaks of, which they pretended to be lawful, becauſe an idol is nothing. This, ſays the Apoſtle, I know as well as you, that an idol is no real deity; but, for all that, the devil is really worſhipped and ſerved by this means: verſe 20. But I ſay, that the things which the Gentiles ſacrifice, they ſacrifice to devils, and not to God, and I would not that ye ſhould have fellowſhip with devils. Ye cannot drink the cup of the Lord, and the cup of devils: ye cannot be partakers of the Lord's table, and the table of devils.

Having

Having declared this way of partaking of things offered to idols, to be unlawful in itſelf, and a virtual renouncing of Chriſtianity; then he proceeds to the conſideration of the other caſe, of eating of things offered to idols out of their temples, which might happen ſeveral ways. Sometimes, being ſold by the prieſts, they were expoſed to ſale in the market. Sometimes the Heathens carried ſome remainders of the ſacrifices to their houſes, and, inviting the Chriſtians to a feaſt, might ſet theſe meats before them; what ſhould Chriſtians do in either of theſe caſes?

Firſt, He determines, in general, that, out of the temples, it was lawful to eat theſe things, becauſe, in ſo doing, they communicated in no act of worſhip with the Heathens: it is lawful, he ſays, in itſelf; but becauſe it might be harmful to others, and give ſcandal, in ſuch circumſtances, it became unlawful by accident: Verſe 23. All things are lawful to me, but all things are not expedient; all things are lawful for me, but all things edify not. Things which are lawful in themſelves, may, in ſome caſes, be very dangerous and deſtructive to others; and we ſhould not only conſider ourſelves, but others alſo. Let no man ſeek his own; but every man another's welfare. And then he comes to the particular caſes. Whatever is ſold in the ſhambles, that eat, aſking no queſtion for conſcience ſake: for the earth is the Lord's, and the fulneſs thereof. We may take theſe things from God's hand, who is the true Lord of them, and of all creatures. For this reaſon we may, without ſcrupulous enqniry, uſe thoſe meats which are publickly expoſed to ſale.

And ſo likewiſe in the other caſe, if we be invited to the table of an Heathen, we may eat what is ſet before us, without enquiring whether it be any part of an idol-ſacrifice. But if any man tell us, that this meat was offered in ſacrifice to idols, in that caſe we ought to abſtain from eating of it, for his ſake that ſhewed it, and for conſcience ſake; that is, out of regard to the opinion of thoſe who think theſe meats unlawful: for the earth is the Lord's, and the fulneſs thereof. Alſo in another ſenſe; God hath made ſuch abundant proviſion for us, that we may abſtain from this or that meat, without any great great inconvenience. Conſcience, I ſay, not thine own, but another's. He had ſaid before, we ſhould eat of what was ſet before us, aſking no queſtion for conſcience ſake; that is, not making it a matter of conſcience to ourſelves: now he ſays, if we be told it was offered to an idol, we ſhould not eat for conſcience ſake; that is, not as making a matter of conſcience of it to ourſelves, but out of regard to the conſcience of another, to whom it might be a ſcandal. For why is my liberty judged of another man's conſcience? and if I, with thankſgiving, be a partaker, why am I evil ſpoken of for that for which I give thanks? that is, why ſhould another man's conſcience be a prejudice to my liberty? if another makes conſcience of it as unlawful, why ſhould his conſcience govern mine, and make me think ſo too; or why ſhould I be evil ſpoken of, for thinking it lawful to eat any thing ſet before me, for which I give thanks? This is a little obſcure; but the plain meaning of the Apoſtle's reaſoning ſeems to be this: Though I have that regard to another man's weak conſcience, as to abſtain from eating what he thinks unlawful; yet am I not therefore bound to be of his opinion, and think it unlawful in itſelf: I will conſider his weakneſs ſo far as to forbear that which I am perſuaded is lawful to do, but yet I will ſtill preſerve the liberty of my own judgment; and as I am content to give no ſcandal to him, ſo I expect that he ſhould not cenſure and condemn me, for thinking that lawful which he believes not to be ſo. And then, from all this diſcourſe, the Apoſtle eſtabliſheth this general rule in the text, Wherefore, whether ye eat or drink, or whatever ye do, do all to the glory of God. To which is parallel that other text, 1 Peter iv. 11. That God in all things may be glorified. So that this general rule lays a duty upon all Chriſtians, of deſigning the glory of God in all their actions; all the difficulty is, what is here meant by this, of doing all things to the glory of God. The Jews have a common ſaying, which ſeems to be parallel with this phraſe of the Apoſtle, That all things ſhould be done in the name of God. And this they make ſo eſſential to every good action, that it was a received principle among them, that he who obeys any command of God, and not in his name, ſhall receive no reward.

Now,

Now, that to do things in the name of God, and to do them to his glory, are but ſeveral phraſes ſignifying the ſame thing, is evident from that precept of the Apoſtle, Col. iii. 17. And whatſoever ye do, in word or in deed, do all in the name of the Lord Jeſus Chriſt; that is, to his glory. Now, for our clear underſtanding of the ſenſe of this phraſe, of glorifying God, or doing things to God's glory; we will conſider the various uſe of it in ſcripture, and ſo deſcend to the proper and particular ſenſe of it here in the text.

The glory of God is nothing elſe but the honour which is given to him by his creatures; and, conſequently, the general notion of glorifying God, or doing any thing to his glory, is to deſign to honour God by ſuch and ſuch actions; and this phraſe is in ſcripture more eſpecially applied to theſe following particulars:

I. We are ſaid, in ſcripture, to glorify God, by a ſolemn acknowledgment of him and his perfections, of his goodneſs and mercy, of his power and wiſdom, of his truth and faithfulneſs, of his ſovereign dominion and authority over us. Hence it is, that all ſolemn actions of religion are called the worſhip of God, which ſignifies that honour and glory which is given to him by his creatures, ſignified by ſome outward expreſſion of reverence and reſpect. Thus we are ſaid to worſhip God, when we fall down before him, and pray to him for mercy and bleſſings, or praiſe him for favours and benefits received from him, or perform any other ſolemn act of religion: Pſal. lxxxvi. 9. All nations whom thou haſt made, ſhall come and worſhip before thee, O Lord, and ſhall glorify thy name.

But eſpecially the duty of praiſe and thankſgiving is moſt frequently in ſcripture called glorifying of God, or giving glory to him: Pſal. lxxxvi. 12. I will praiſe thee, O Lord my God, with all my heart, and will glorify thy name. Matth. v. 16. Let your light ſo ſhine before men, that they may ſee your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven; that is, praiſe him upon that account. Luke v. 25. it is ſaid of the man ſick of the palſy, that, when he was healed, he departed to his own houſe, glorifying God; that is, praiſing God for his great mercy to him. And, Luke xvii. 18. our Saviour, ſpeaking of the ten lepers that were healed, ſays, that but one of them returned to give glory to God; that is, to return thanks to God for his recovery.

II. Men are ſaid, in ſcripture, tn give glory to God, by the acknowledgment of their ſins, and repentance for them: Joſh. vii. 19. And Joſhua ſaid to Achan, My ſon, give glory to the Lord God of Iſrael, and make confeſſion to him. In like manner the Prophet Jeremiah, exhorting the people to repentance, uſeth this expreſſion, Jer. xiii. 16. Give glory to the Lord your God, before he cauſe darkneſs, and before your feet ſtumble upon the dark mountains. And, Rev. xvi. 9. it is ſaid, that thoſe upon whom great plagues fell, repented not to give God glory. We glorify God by confeſſion of our ſins, and repentance, becauſe, in ſo doing, we acknowledge his authority, and the holineſs of thoſe righteous laws which we have broken.

III. We are ſaid likewiſe, in ſcripture, to glorify God by our holineſs and obedience. Thus we are commanded to glorify God by the chaſtity of our bodies, and the purity of our minds: 1 Cor. vi. 20. Glorify God in your body, and in your ſpirit, which are his. Thus our Saviour is ſaid to have glorified God in the world, by his perfect obedience to his will: John xvii. 4. Father, I have glorified thee upon earth. And thus he tells us we may glorify God, by the fruits of holineſs and obedience in our lives: John xv. 8. Herein is my Father glorified, if ye bring forth much fruit. So likewiſe St Paul prays for the Philippians, that they may be filled with the fruits of righteouſneſs, which are by Jeſus Chriſt unto the glory and praiſe of God.

IV. We are ſaid likewiſe, in an eſpecial manner, to glorify God, by our ſufferings for his cauſe and truth. John xxi. 19. our Saviour, foretelling St Peter's martyrdom, expreſſeth it by this phraſe, of glorifying God by his death, This ſpake he, ſignifying by what death he ſhould glorify God.

V. And laſtly, And becauſe religion is the ſolemn honour, and publick owning and acknowledgment of the Deity; hence it is that, in ſcripture, we are ſaid to glorify God in a peculiar and eminent manner, when, in all our actions, we conſult the honour and advantage of religion. Upon this account, St Peter exhorts the miniſters niſters of the goſpel, ſo to preach to the people, and ſo to perform the publick offices of religion, as may be for the honour of religion; and this he calls glorifying of God, 1 Pet. iv. 11. If any man ſpeak, let him ſpeak as the oracles of God; if any man miniſter, let him do it as of the ability which God giveth; that God in all things may be glorified. And becauſe the peace and unity of Chriſtians is ſo very much for the honour and advantage of religion, therefore we are ſaid in an eſpecial manner to glorify God, by maintaining the peace and unity of the church: Rom. xv. 5, 6. Now the God of patience and conſolation grant you to be like-minded one toward another, that ye may with one mind and one mouth glorify God, even the Father of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt. And here in the text, we are ſaid to do all things to the glory of God, when in all our actions we have a regard to the promoting and advancing of religion and the edification of Chriſtians. For here by eating and drinking to the glory of God, the Apoſtle plainly means, that when things offered to idols are ſet before us, we ſhould refrain from them, when, by our eating, the intereſt of religion, and the edification of Chriſtians may receive any prejudice; that is, when our eating may be a ſcandal to others; that is, a ſtumbling-block, or an occaſion of falling into ſin. And that this is the Apoſtle's meaning, is evident from ver. 23. All things are lawful for me, but all things are not expedient, οὐ πάντα συμφέρει, all things profit not; all things are lawful for me, but all things edify not; that is, though I know it is a thing very lawful in itſelf, to eat things which have been offered to idols, if they be bought in the market, or accidentally ſet before me at a feaſt: yet in ſome circumſtances it may not be for the advantage of religion, and be ſo far from edifying, that it may be an occaſion of ſin to them. For inſtance, I am invited to a feaſt, where things offered to idols are ſet before me, and one ſays, this was offered in ſacrifice unto idols, a ſufficient intimation to me that he thinks it unlawful; and therefore I will forbear, becauſe of the inconvenience to religion, and the manifold ſcandal that might follow upon it, by hindering others from embracing religion; or by tempting weak Chriſtians, either to the doing of a thing againſt their conſcience, or to a-poſtatize from religion. In this caſe he that abſtains from theſe meats, and contents himſelf with others, eats to the glory of God.

And that this is the true notion of ſcandal and offence, not barely to grieve others, or do things diſpleaſing to them, but to do ſuch things as are really hurtful to others, and may be a prejudice or hinderance to their ſalvation, and an occaſion of their falling into ſin; I ſay, that this is the true and proper notion of ſcandal, is evident from what follows immediately after the text: Give none offence to the Jews, nor to the Gentiles, nor to the church of God; as I pleaſe all men in all things, not ſeeking mine own profit, but the profit of many, that they may be ſaved. Give no offence to the Jews, nor to the Gentiles, nor to the church of God; the Apoſtle intimates that ſuch an action as this we are ſpeaking of might be an occaſion of ſin to all theſe, and a hinderance of their ſalvation: it might hinder the Jew from turning Chriſtian, and harden him in his infidelity; for he might ſay, See how well you Chriſtians worſhip one God, when you can partake of things offered to idols: it might confirm the Heathen in his ſuperſtition, and keep him from embracing Chriſtianity; for he might ſay ſurely, Why ſhould the Chriſtians perſuade me to forſake the worſhip of idols, when they themſelves will knowingly eat things offered to them? It might tempt the weak Chriſtians either to ſin againſt their conſciences by following my example, or to apoſtatize from Chriſtianity upon this offence taken againſt it; therefore, ſays the Apoſtle, do all things to the glory of God; that is, for the honour and advantage of the Chriſtian religion, and the furtherance of mens ſalvation; for ſo, ſays he, I do in theſe, and all other actions of my life; I ſtudy the advantage of all men, in all things, not regarding mine own convenience, in compariſon of the eternal ſalvation of others.

And thus I have, as briefly and clearly as I could, explained this phraſe to you, of doing things to the glory of God.

The reſult of all is, that we glorify God by doing our duty, by all actions of worſhip and obedience to God, and by our repentance in caſe of ſin and diſobedience, by doing and by ſuffering the will of God, more especially by using our Christian liberty, as to things lawful in themselves, so as may make most for the honour and advantage of religion, for the unity and edification of the church, and the salvation of the souls of men, which is the proper notion here in the text, of eating and drinking, and doing whatever we do, to the glory of God.

From all this discourse it will be evident, that three things must concur, that our actions may be said to be done to the glory of God.

1. Our actions must be materially good; we must do what God commands, and abstain from doing what he hath forbidden. Sin is in its nature a dishonour to God, a contradiction to his nature, and a contempt of his authority and laws; so that we cannot glorify God by transgressing our duty.

2. Our actions must not only be good, but they must be done with regard to God, and out of conscience of our duty to him, and in hopes of the reward which he hath promised, and not for any low, and mean, and temporal end. The best action in itself may be spoiled, and all the virtue of it blasted, by being done for a wrong end. If we serve God to please men, and be charitable out of vain-glory to be seen of men; if we profess godliness for gain, and are religious only to serve our temporal interest, though the actions we do be never so good, yet all the virtue and reward of them is lost, by the mean end and design which we aim at in the doing of them; because all this while we have no love or regard for God, and the authority of his laws; we make no conscience of our duty to him, we are not moved by the rewards of another world, which may lawfully work upon us, and prevail with us; but we are swayed by little temporal advantages, which if we could obtain as well by doing the contrary, we would as soon, nay perhaps much sooner do it.

And this is so essentially necessary, that no action, though never so good, that is not done with regard to God, and upon some of the proper motives and considerations of religion, such as are the authority of God, conscience of our duty to him, love of him, faith in his promises, fear of his displeasure; I say, no action that is not done upon all, or ſome of theſe motives, can be ſaid to be done to the glory of God. And this is the meaning of that ſaying among the Jews, which I mentioned before, That he who obeys any command of God, but not in his name, ſhall receive no reward. Moral actions receive their denomination of good or evil, as well from the end, as from the matter of them; and as the beſt end cannot ſanctify an action bad in itſelf, ſo a bad end and deſign is enough to ſpoil the beſt action we can do; and as it is great impiety to do a wicked thing, though for a religious end, ſo it is great hypocriſy to be religious for mean and temporal ends.

3. That all our actions may be done to the glory of God, we muſt not only take care that they be lawful in themſelves, but that they be not ſpoiled and vitiated by any bad circumſtance; for circumſtances alter moral actions, and may render that which is lawful in itſelf, unlawful in ſome caſes: ſo that if we would do all things to the glory of God, we muſt in ſome caſes refrain from doing that which is lawful in itſelf. As when ſuch an action that I am about do do, may through the prejudice or miſtake of men probably redound to the diſhonour and diſadvantage of religion, by cauſing factions and diviſions, by hindering ſome from embracing the true religion, or making others apoſtatize from it, or by being any other way an occaſion to men of falling into ſin, or any impediment to their ſalvation; in theſe and the like caſes, we are bound to have that conſideration of religion, that regard to the peace and unity of the church, that tenderneſs and charity for the ſouls of men, as to deny ourſelves the uſe of things otherwiſe lawful; and if we do not do it, we offend againſt a great rule both of piety and charity.

I ſhall only farther at preſent endeavour to give a brief reſolution to two queſtions, much debated upon occaſion of this rule of the Apoſtle, of doing all things to the glory of God.

Firſt, How far we are bound actually to intend and deſign the glory of God in every particular action of our lives? To this I anſwer,

1. That it is morally impoſſible that a man ſhould do every particular action with actual and explicit thoughts and intentions of glorifying God thereby, and therefore there can be no obligation to any such thing.

and

2. It is not necessary, no more than for a man that takes a journey, every step of his way actually to think of his journey's end, and the place whither he intends to go. A constant resolution to go to such a place, and a due care not to go out of the way; and in case of any doubt, to inform ourselves as well as we can of the right way, and to keep in it, is as much consideration of the end of a man's journey, as is needful to bring him thither, and more than this would be troublesome and to no purpose; the case is the very same in the course of a man's life. From whence it follows, in the

3. Place, That an habitual and settled intention of mind, to glorify God in the course of our lives, is sufficient; because this will serve all good purposes, as well as an actual intention upon every particular occasion. He that doth things with regard to God, and out of conscience of his duty to him, and upon the proper motives and considerations of religion, in obedience and love to God, in hopes of his reward, and out of fear of his displeasure, glorifies God in his actions. And if this principle be but rooted and settled in his mind, it is sufficient to govern his life, and is virtually, and to all purposes, as true and constant an intention of glorifying God, as if we did actually and explicitly propound this end to ourselves in every particular action of our lives.

Secondly, Whether a man be bound to prefer the glory of God before his own eternal happiness, as Moses and St Paul seem to have done; the one in being content to have his name blotted out of the book of life, the other to be anathema from Christ, for the salvation of Israel? To this I answer,

If we could admit the supposition, that the glory of God and a man's eternal happiness might come in competition, there could be no obligation upon a man to chuse eternal misery upon any consideration whatsoever. The preference of one thing before another, supposeth them both to be objects of our choice; but the greatest evil, known and apprehended to be so, cannot be the object of a reasonable choice; neither the greatest moral nor natural evil of ſin, or miſery. Sin is not to be choſen in any caſe, no not for the glory of God. The Apoſtle makes the ſuppoſition, and anſwers it; that if the truth and glory of God could be promoted by his lie, yet we are not to do evil that good may come, Rom. iii. 7, 8.

Nor is the greateſt natural evil the object of our choice. God himſelf hath planted a principle in our nature to the contrary, to ſeek our own happineſs, and to avoid utter ruin and deſtruction; and then ſurely much more that which is much worſe, as eternal miſery is, whatever ſome learned men, in deſpite of nature and common ſenſe, have aſſerted to the contrary, that it is better and more deſirable to be extremely and eternally miſerable, than not to be; for what is there deſirable in being, when it ſerves to no other purpoſe but to be the foundation of endleſs and intolerable miſery? and if this be a principle of our nature, can any man imagine that God ſhould frame us ſo, as to make the firſt and fundamental principle of it directly oppoſite to our duty?

As to the inſtance of Moſes, it does not reach this caſe; becauſe the phraſe of blotting out of the book of life, does in all probability ſignify no more than a temporal death. As to that of St Paul, it is by no means to be taken in a ſtrict ſenſe, but as a vehement and hyperbolical expreſſion of his mighty affection to his brethren according to the fleſh, for whom, ſays he, I could wiſh to be an anathema from Chriſt. Beſides the reaſon of the thing, the form of the expreſſion ſhews the meaning of it; I could wiſh, that is, I would be content to do or ſuffer almoſt any thing for their ſalvation, inſomuch that I could wiſh, if it were fit, and lawful, and reaſonable to make ſuch a wiſh, to be accurſed from Chriſt for their ſakes. It is plainly a ſuſpended form of ſpeech, which declares nothing abſolutely. But,

2. It is a vain and ſenſeleſs ſuppoſition, that the glory of God and our eternal happineſs can ſtand in competition. By ſeeking the glory of God, we naturally and directly promote our own happineſs; the glory of God and our happineſs are inſeparably linked together; we cannot glorify God by ſin; and ſo gracious hath God

God been to us, that he hath made thoſe things to be our duty, which naturally tend to our felicity; and we cannot glorify God more than by doing our duty, nor can we promote our own happineſs more effectually than by the ſame way. From whence it plainly follows, that the glory of God and our happineſs cannot reaſonably be ſuppoſed to croſs and contradict one another; and therefore the queſtion is frivolous which ſuppoſeth they may come in competition. 1 Cor xv. 58. the Apoſtle exhorts Chriſtians to be ſtedfaſt and immoveable, and abundant in the work of the Lord, knowing that their labour ſhall not be in vain in the Lord. And Tit. i. 1, 2. the Apoſtle calls himſelf a ſervant of Jeſus Chriſt, in hope of eternal life, which God that cannot lie hath promiſed. To ſerve God in hope of eternal life, is to glorify God; and therefore the glory of God, and our eternal happineſs, are never to be oppoſed.

I ſhall briefly draw two or three inferences from this diſcourſe, and ſo conclude.

I. See here the great goodneſs of God to mankind, who is pleaſed to eſteem whatever is for the good of men to be for the glory of God; and whatever tends to the eternal ſalvation of ourſelves, or others, to be a glorifying of himſelf.

II. We learn hence, likewiſe, the excellency of the Chriſtian religion, which requires not only a conſcientious care of ourſelves, to do nothing but what is lawful; but likewiſe a charitable regard to others in the uſe of our liberty; in the doing or not doing of thoſe things which we may lawfully do. After the ſecuring of our own happineſs by doing our duty, we are to conſult the edification and ſalvation of others, in the charitable uſe of our liberty in thoſe things which God hath left indifferent.

III. Here is a great argument to us to be very careful of our duty, and to abound in the fruits of holineſs, becauſe hereby we glorify God. Herein is my Father glorified, ſays our Saviour, if ye bring forth much fruit; and the Apoſtle tells us, that the fruits of righteouſneſs are to the praiſe and glory of God. We have all from God, our very being, our ſouls and bodies, and the powers and faculties of both; and therefore we ſhould give him the glory of his own gifts: our ſouls and bodies were not only made by him at firſt, but are likewiſe redeemed by him, and bought with a price, and therefore, as the Apoſtle argues, we ſhould glorify him in our bodies and in our ſouls which are his.

IV. And laſtly, We ſhould in all our actions have a particular regard to the honour and advantage of religion, the edification of our brethren, and the peace and unity of the church; becauſe in theſe things we do in a peculiar manner glorify God. In vain do men pretend to ſeek the glory of God by faction and diviſion, which do in their own nature ſo immediately tend to the diſhonour and damage of religion. Next to the wicked lives of men, nothing is ſo great a diſparagement and weakening to religion, as the diviſions of Chriſtians; and therefore, inſtead of employing our zeal about differences, we ſhould be zealous for peace and unity, that with one mind, and one mouth, we may glorify God, even the Father of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt.

SERMON CCXI.

Doing good, a ſecurity againſt injuries from men.

1 PET. iii. 13.

And who is he that will harm you, if ye be followers of that which is good?

THE Apoſtle, in this and the former chapter, earneſtly preſſeth Chriſtians to an holy and unblameable converſation, that the Heathen might have no occaſion, from the ill lives of Chriſtians, to reproach Chriſtianity; particularly he cautions them againſt that abuſe of Chriſtian liberty, which it ſeems too many were guilty of, caſting off obedience to their ſuperiors under that pretence; telling them that nothing could be a greater ſcandal to their religion, nor raiſe raiſe a more juſt prejudice in the mind of men againſt it; and therefore he ſtrictly chargeth them with the duty of obedience in their ſeveral relations; as of ſubjects to their governors, of ſervants to their maſters, of wives to their huſbands; and, in ſhort, to practiſe all thoſe virtues, both among themſelves and towards others, which are apt to reconcile and gain the affections of men to them; to be charitable and compaſſionate, courteous and peaceable one towards another, and towards all men; not only to abſtain from injury and provocation, but from revenge by word or deed; and inſtead thereof to bleſs and do good, and by all poſſible means to preſerve and purſue peace: Ver. 8, 9. Finally, be ye all of one mind, having compaſſion one of another; love as brethren, be pitiful, be courteous, not rendering evil for evil, or railing for railing, but contrariwiſe bleſſing; knowing that ye are thereunto called, that ye ſhould inherit a bleſſing.

And to encourage them to the practice of thoſe virtues, he tells them, that they could by no other means more effectually conſult the ſafety and comfort of their lives: ver. 10. For he that will love life, and ſee good days; let him refrain his tongue from evil, and his lips that they ſpeak no guile; let him eſchew evil, and do good; let him ſeek peace and enſue it.

And this was the way to gain the favour of God, and to engage his providence for our protection: ver. 12. For the eyes of the Lord are over the righteous, and his ears are open unto their prayers: but the face of the Lord is againſt them that do that evil.

And that this would alſo be the beſt way to reconcile men to us, and to gain their good-will, and to prevent injuries and affronts from them: ver. 13. And who is he that will harm you, &c.

In theſe words we have, firſt, a qualification ſuppoſed, If ye be followers of that which is good.

Secondly, The benefit and advantage we may reaſonably expect from it, viz. ſecurity from the ill uſage and injuries of men: Who is he that will harm you?

Firſt, The qualification ſuppoſed is, that we be followers of that which is good. But what is that? The Apoſtle takes it for granted, ſhat every body knows it, and

and he had given inſtances of it before. He does not go about to define or explain it, but appeals to every man's mind and conſcience, to tell him what it is. It is not any thing that is diſputed and controverted, which ſome men call good, and others evil; but that which all are agreed in, and which is univerſally approved and commended by Heathens as well as Chriſtians, that which is ſubſtantially good, and that which is unqueſtionably ſo. It is not zeal for leſſer things, about the ritual and ceremonial part of religion, and a great ſtrictneſs about the external parts of it, and much nicety and ſcupulouſneſs about things of no moment, as the Phariſees tithing of mint, &c. about meats and drinks, and the obſervation of days, and the like; but a purſuit of the weightier things of the law, a care of the great duties of religion, mercy, and juſtice, and fidelity; thoſe things wherein the kingdom of God conſiſts, righteouſneſs and peace: ſuch as theſe the Apoſtle had inſtanced in, as ſubſtantial and unqueſtionable parts of goodneſs, things which admit of no diſpute, but do approve themſelves to the reaſon and conſcience of all mankind: and the practice of theſe he calls following of that which is good *.

Be ye followers of that which is good; the word is μιμηται, if ye imitate the good you ſee in others; in one copy the words ζηλωται, if ye be zealous of that which is good. And this is not amiſs. Zeal about leſſer and diſputable things is very unſuitable and miſbecoming: but we cannot be too earneſt and zealous in the purſuit of things which are ſubſtantially and unqueſtionably good; it is good, and will become us to be zealouſly affected about ſuch things. Some things will not bear much zeal; and the more earneſt we are about them, the leſs we recommend ourſelves to the approbation of ſober and conſiderate men. Great zeal about little and doubtful things, is an argument of a weak mind, infatuated by ſuperſtition, or over-heated by enthuſiaſm: but nothing more becomes a wiſe man, than the ſerious and earneſt purſuit of thoſe things which are agreed on all hands to be good, and have an univerſal approbation among all parties and profeſſions of men, how wide wide ſoever their differences may be in other matters. This for the qualification ſuppoſed, If ye be followers of that which is good. I proceed to the Second thing in the text, the benefit and advantage which may reaſonably be expected from it, and that is, ſecurity from the ill uſage and injuries of men. Who is he that will harm you, &c. The Apoſtle doth not abſolutely ſay, none will do it; but he ſpeaks of it as a thing ſo very unreaſonable, and upon all accounts ſo unlikely and improbable, that we may reaſonably preſume that it will not ordinarily and often happen. Not but that good men are liable to be affronted and perſecuted, and no man's virtues, how bright and unblemiſhed ſoever, will at all times, and in all caſes, exempt him from all manner of injury and ill treatment: but the following of that which is good, as I have explained it, doth in its own nature tend to ſecure us from the malice and miſchief of men, and very frequently does it; and, all things conſidered, is a much more effectual means to this end, than any other courſe we can take, and this the Apoſtle means when he ſays, Who is he that will harm you?

And this will appear, whether we conſider the nature of virtue and goodneſs; or the nature of man, even when it is very much depraved and corrupted; or the providence of God.

I. If we conſider the nature of virtue and goodneſs, which is apt to gain upon the affections of men, and ſecretly to win their love and eſteem. True goodneſs is inwardly eſteemed by bad men, and many times had in very great eſteem and admiration, even by thoſe who are very far from the practice of it: it carries an awe and majeſty with it; ſo that bad men are very often with-held and reſtrained from harming the good, by that ſecret and inward reverence which they bear to goodneſs.

There are ſeveral virtues, which are apt in their own nature to prevent injuries and affronts from others. Humility takes away all occaſion of inſolence from the proud and haughty; it baffles pride, and puts it out of countenance. Meekneſs pacifies wrath, and blunts the edge of injury and violence. Suffering good for evil is apt to allay and extinguiſh enmity, to ſubdue the roughеſt diſpoſitions, and to conquer even malice itſelf. And there are other virtues which are apt in their own nature to oblige men, and gain their good-will, and make them our friends, and tie their affections ſtrongly to us; as courteſy and charity, kindneſs and compaſſion, and a readineſs to do all good offices to all men; and the friendſhip and good-will of others is a powerful defence againſt injuries. Every man will cry ſhame of thoſe who ſhall fall foul upon him that hurts no body. He that obligeth many, ſhall have many to take his part when he is aſſaulted, to riſe up in his defence and reſcue, and to interpoſe between him and danger. For a good man, ſays the Apoſtle, ſome would even dare to die.

Beſides, it is very conſiderable, that none of theſe virtues expoſe men to any danger and trouble from human laws. When Chriſtianity was perſecuted, becauſe it differed from, and oppoſed the received religion and ſuperſtition of the world, it was commonly acknowledged by the Heathen, as Tertullian tells us, that the Chriſtians were very good men in all other things, ſaving that they were Chriſtians. When the laws were moſt ſevere againſt Chriſtians for their meetings, which they called ſeditious, and for their refuſal to comply with the received ſuperſtition of the world, which they called contempt of the gods, yet there were all this while no laws made againſt modeſty, and humility, and meekneſs, and kindneſs, and charity, and peaceableneſs, and forgiveneſs of injuries. Theſe virtues are in their nature of ſo unalterable goodneſs, that they could not poſſibly be made matter of accuſation; no government ever had the face to make laws againſt them, And this the Apoſtle takes notice of as a ſingular commendation, and great teſtimony to the immutable goodneſs of theſe things, that, in the experience of all ages and nations, there was never any ſuch inconvenience found in any of them, as to give occaſion to a law againſt them: Gal. v. 22, 23. But the fruit of the ſpirit is love, joy, peace, long-ſuffering, gentleneſs, fidelity, meekneſs, temperance. Againſt ſuch things there is no law. So that goodneſs from its own nature hath this ſecurity, that it brings men under the danger of no law.

II. If

II. If we conſider the nature of man, even where it is very much depraved and corrupted. There is ſomething that is apt to reſtrain bad men from injuring thoſe that are remarkably good; a reverence for goodneſs, and the inward convictions of their own mind, that thoſe whom they are going about to injure, are better and more righteous than themſelves; the fear of God, and of bringing down his vengeance upon their heads, by their ill treatment of his friends and followers; and many times the fear of men, who, tho' they be not good themſelves, yet have an eſteem for thoſe that are ſo, and cannot endure to ſee them wronged and oppreſſed, eſpecially if they have been obliged by them, and have found the real effects of their goodneſs, in good offices done by them to themſelves.

Beſides that bad men are ſeldom bad for nought, without any cauſe given, without any manner of temptation and provocation to be ſo. Who will hurt a harmleſs man, and injure the innocent? for what cauſe, or for what end ſhould he do it? he muſt love miſchief for itſelf, that will do it to thoſe who never offered him any occaſion and provocation.

III. If we conſider the providence of God, which is particularly concerned for the protection of innocency and goodneſs. For the righteous Lord loveth righteouſneſs, and his countenance will behold the upright. This the Apoſtle takes notice of, in the verſe before the text, as the great ſecurity of good men againſt violence and injury: The eyes of the Lord are over the righteous, and his ears are open to their prayers. So that, if bad men were never ſo ill-diſpoſed toward the good, and bent to do them all the injury and miſchief they could deviſe, the providence of God hath a thouſand ways to prevent it; and, if he pleaſes to interpoſe between them and danger, who can harm them, if they would? He can ſnare the wicked in the works of their own hands, and make the miſchief which they deviſed againſt good men, to return upon their own heads; he can weaken their hands, and infatuate their counſels, ſo that they ſhall not be able to bring their wicked enterprizes to paſs; he can change their hearts, and turn the fierceneſs and rage of men againſt us, into a fit of love and kindneſs, as he did the heart of Eſau towards his brother Jacob; and their bittereſt enmity againſt truth and goodneſs, into a mighty zeal for it, as he did in St Paul, who, when he came to Damaſcus, fell a-preaching up that way, which he came thither on purpoſe to perſecute. And this God hath promiſed to do for good men, who are careful to pleaſe him. When a man's ways pleaſe the Lord, he will make his enemies to be at peace with him.

So that, conſidering the nature of goodneſs, and the nature of man, and the providence of God, who is like to harm us, if we be followers of that which is good? none can reaſonably do it, and he muſt be a very bad man that can find in his heart to do it, when there is no cauſe, no temptation or provocation to it; and the providence of God, who hath the hearts of men in his hands, and can ſway and incline them as he pleaſeth, is particularly concerned to preſerve good men from harm and miſchief.

And yet we are not to underſtand this ſaying of the Apoſtle, as declaring to us the conſtant and certain event of things, without any exception to the contrary. For good men, to appearance, nay thoſe that are really ſo, and the very beſt of men, are ſometimes expoſed to great injuries and ſufferings; of which I ſhall give you an account in theſe following particulars:

I. Some that ſeem to be good, are not ſincerely ſo; and when they, by the juſt judgment of God, are puniſhed for their hypocriſy, in the opinion of many, goodneſs ſeems to ſuffer. Some, under a great profeſſion and colour of religion, have done very bad things, and when they juſtly ſuffer for great crimes, they call puniſhment perſecution, and the party and church which they are of, call them ſaints and martyrs.

II. Some that are really good, are very imperfectly ſo, have many flaws and defects, which do very much blemiſh and obſcure their goodneſs; they are followers of that which is good, but they have an equal zeal for things which have no goodneſs in them, or ſo little, that it is not worth all that ſtir and buſtle which they make about them; and will contend as earneſtly for a doubtful, and, it may be, for a falſe opinion, as for the articles of the creed, and for the faith which was once delivered to the ſaints; ſaints; and will oppoſe a little ceremony with as much heat as the greateſt immorality. In theſe caſes, it is not mens goodneſs which raiſeth enmity againſt them, but their imprudent zeal, and other infirmities which attend it: but, however, bad men are glad to lay hold of theſe occaſions and pretences of enmity, which their indiſcretion offers. Good men may be, and frequently are, miſtaken in their opinions and apprehenſions of things; but it is a great miſtake to have an equal zeal for little and doubtful things, as for the great and indiſpenſable duties of the Chriſtian life, and yet, many times, ſo as to neglect thoſe to a great degree; and men muſt blame themſelves for the inconveniencies that happen to them for their own indiſcretion; for neither will the nature of the thing bear them out alike, nor will the providence of God be equally concerned to protect men in the following of that, which they, through groſs miſtake, and a heady conceit of their own knowledge in religion, think to be good, as in the following of that which is really and unqueſtionably good.

III. The enmity of ſome men againſt goodneſs is ſo violent and implacable, that no innocency, no excellency of goodneſs, how great ſoever, can reſtrain their malice towards good men, or hinder the effects of it, when it comes in their way, and they have power to do them miſchief. Againſt theſe the providence of God is our beſt ſafeguard, and it is wiſdom, as much as is poſſible, to keep out of their way, and to pray, with St Paul, that we may be delivered from wicked and unreaſonable men. Men of ſo abſurd a malice againſt goodneſs, that it is not to be prevented by any innocency or prudence; and ſo implacable, that there is no way to gain and reconcile them, nor perhaps is it much deſirable; their good word would be no credit to us, and their friendſhip would be pernicious, when it cannot be had upon other terms, than of conniving at their faults, and being concerned in their quarrels, and, at laſt, quarrelling and breaking with them, unleſs we will run with them to the ſame exceſs of riot. The friendſhip of ſuch men is more terrible than their enmity, and their malice much leſs to be dreaded than their kindneſs.

IV. The laſt and chief exception is that of the croſs, when the ſufferings and perſecutions of good men are neceſſary for the great ends of God's glory, for the advancement of religion, and the example and ſalvation of others. And, with this exception, all the declarations of ſcripture, concerning the temporal proſperity and ſafety of good men, and all the promiſes of the New Teſtament, are to be underſtood. And this exception our Saviour himſelf expreſly makes, Mark x. 29, 30. Verily I ſay unto you, there is no man that hath left houſe, or brethren, or ſiſters, or father, or mother, or wife, or children, or lands, for my ſake and the goſpel's, but he ſhall receive an hundred-fold now in this time, houſes, and brethren, and ſiſters, and mothers, and children, and lands, with perſecution; and in the world to come eternal life; that is, ſo far as a ſtate of perſecution would admit, all theſe loſſes ſhould be recompenſed to them in this preſent time; as they were to the Apoſtles in a remarkable manner, when they, who had but little to part with for the goſpel, had the eſtates of Chriſtians laid at their feet, and committed to their diſpoſal, for the nobleſt purpoſes of charity, and common ſupport of Chriſtians, which was as much to them, as if they had been maſters of the greateſt eſtates; and whatever was wanting to any of them, in the accompliſhment of this promiſe, was abundantly made up to them in the unſpeakable and eternal happineſs of the world to come. And this exception the Apoſtle St Peter is careful to mention expreſly, immediately after the text; for, after he had ſaid, Who is he that will harm you, if ye be followers of that which is good? he immediately adds, But, and if ye ſuffer for righteouſneſs ſake, happy are ye; and be not afraid of their terror, neither be troubled, but ſanctify the Lord God in your hearts; that is, in this caſe, fear God more than men, and be ready always to give an anſwer to every man that aſketh you a reaſon of the hope that is in you; that is, if ye be queſtioned for being Chriſtians, be ready to own your profeſſion, and to give a reaſon of it; ſo that the Apoſtle ſuppoſeth, that, notwithſtanding what he had ſaid, that ordinarily it is not in the nature of men to perſecute men for true goodneſs, yet they muſt not expect to be exempted empted from perſecution, which was neceſſary for the eſtabliſhment of the Chriſtian religion.

In theſe caſes, God permits the devil to inſtigate and exaſperate evil men againſt thoſe that are good, to act beyond their uſual temper. Thus God, when he deſigned an illuſtrious example of patience for all ages of the world, he lets looſe the devil, not only to ſtir up his inſtruments, the Chaldeans and Sabeans, againſt Job, but to afflict him immediately himſelf with bodily pains and diſeaſes. In theſe, and the like caſes, the beſt of men are expoſed to the greateſt ſufferings. Thus God permitted Socrates, that great light among the Gentiles, and the glory of philoſophy, to be cruelly treated and put to death, for an example of virtue, and a teſtimony againſt their impious and abominable idolatry. And thus likewiſe, when it was neceſſary for the common ſalvation of men, and to give the world an example, beyond all exception, of the greateſt innocency enduring the greateſt indignities and ſufferings with the greateſt patience, that one ſhould ſuffer for all mankind, he permitted the beſt man that ever was, God and goodneſs incarnate, by wicked hands to be crucified and ſlain; and afterwards, when it was neceſſary, for the propagation and eſtabliſhment of Chriſtianity in the world, that the truth of it ſhould be ſealed by the death of ſo many martyrs, God was pleaſed to ſuffer the rage of bad men to break out into all manner of violence and cruelty.

But yet, notwithſtanding theſe exceptions, thoſe who make it their buſineſs to do good, and to excel in thoſe virtues which are apt to win and oblige mankind, may, in ordinary caſes and times, expect great ſafety and protection againſt the injuries of the world, for an exemplary piety and innocency, and goodneſs; for theſe ſayings in the New Teſtament, that, through many tribulations we muſt enter into the kingdom of God and that, whoever will live godly in Jeſus Chriſt muſt ſuffer perſecution, are not equally to be extended to all places and times; but more peculiarly to be underſtood of the firſt times of Chriſtianity, when the providence of God thought fit to eſtabliſh the Chriſtian religion upon the innocent lives and patient ſufferings of the firſt profeſſors of it.

The reſult from all this diſcourſe is, that we ſhould not be weary of well-doing; but mind and follow the things which are ſubſtantially and unqueſtionably good; not doubting, but, beſides the infinite reward of it in the other world, it will ordinarily turn to our great ſecurity and advantage in this life, and ſave us harmleſs from a great many miſchiefs and inconveniencies which others are expoſed to. If we endeavour to excel in thoſe Chriſtian virtues which the Apoſtle mentions before the text, and which he means by our being followers of that which is good, we ſhall undoubtedly find the comfort of it, in thoſe temporal benefits that will redound to us; for the ſcripture hath not ſaid in vain, Truſt in the Lord, and do good, ſo ſhalt thou dwell in the land, and verily thou ſhalt be fed. Bleſſed are the meek, for they ſhall inherit the earth. Glory, and honour, and peace, to every man that worketh good. That the fruit of righteouſneſs is ſown in peace of them that work peace; that, by well-doing, we ſhall put to ſilence the ignorance of fooliſh men; that the kingdom of God is not meat and drink, but righteouſneſs, and peace, and joy in the Holy Ghoſt; and that he that in thoſe things ſerveth Chriſt, is accepted of God, and approved of men.

But, if we miſtake religion, and place it in thoſe things wherein it doth not really conſiſt, in airy notions, and doubtful opinions, in ſuperſtitious conceits and practices, and in a fiery and furious zeal for things of no weight and ſubſtance, of no real virtue and goodneſs; if we be defective in the great virtues of meekneſs and humility, of peaceableneſs and charity, of kindneſs and courteſy, of forbearance and forgiveneſs, of rendering good for evil, and overcoming evil with good, qualities which will univerſally endear us and recommend us to the favour and protection of God, and to the eſteem and good-will of men; and if, inſtead of theſe, we abound in malice and envy, be proud and conceited, cenſorious and uncharitable, contentious and unpeaceable, rude and uncivil, impatient and implacable, we muſt not think it ſtrange, if we be ill-treated in this world, not for our goodneſs, but for our want of it; and we have no reaſon to wonder, if, at every turn, we meet with the inconveniencies of our own heat and indiſcretion, of our peeviſh and moroſe temper, of our factious and turbulent disposition. For this is an eternal rule of truth, As we sow, so shall we reap; every man shall be filled with his own ways, and eat the fruit of his own doings.

SERMON CCXII.

Of diligence in our general and particular calling.

Preached at Whitehall, 1685.

ECCL. ix. 10.

Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might; for there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom in the grave, whither thou goest.

THese words of the royal preacher are a general exhortation to diligence and industry, in that work which is most proper for us to do in this world. And I shall consider in them these two things:

First, The matter of this advice and exhortation, and that is, that we would use great diligence about those things which are the proper work and employment of this life. Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might. Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do; that is, the work which is before thee, which is most proper for thee to propose to thyself, as the great end and design of thy life, the province and charge which is appointed thee. So that these words, in the full compass and extent of them, may very well comprehend every reasonable purpose and undertaking, whatever is incumbent upon us as a duty, and is matter of reasonable choice. Do it with all thy might; that is, set about it with great care, use all poſſible diligence and induſtry for the effecting and accompliſhing of it.

Secondly, Here is the argument whereby the wiſe preacher doth enforce this counſel and exhortation; becauſe this life is the proper ſeaſon of activity and induſtry, of deſigning and doing thoſe things which are in order to a future happineſs; and, when this life is at an end, there will be no farther opportunity of working, there will nothing then remain, but to reap the fruit, and to receive the juſt recompence of what we have done in this life: For there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wiſdom in the grave, whither thou goeſt. In the grave; this the LXX. render by the word ἅδης, by which the Greeks uſed to expreſs the ſtate of the dead, the condition of ſeparate ſouls of good or bad men after they are departed this life, and entered into another world. In which ſtate, Solomon does not mean that departed ſouls have no knowledge and ſenſe of any thing, but that then there will be no place for any counſel and deſign, for any activity and induſtry in order to our happineſs: what we do to this purpoſe, we muſt do whilſt we are in this world; it will be too late afterwards to think of altering or bettering our condition.

Theſe are the two parts of the text, and they ſhall be the two heads of my following diſcourſe; and God grant, that what ſhall be ſaid upon them, may be effectual to perſuade every one of us ſeriouſly to mind our great intereſt and concernment, and to apply ourſelves, with all our might, to that which is our proper work and buſineſs in this world.

Firſt, We will conſider the matter of this counſel and exhortation; and that is, that we would uſe great diligence and induſtry about that which is our proper work and buſineſs in this life; and this may very probably comprehend in it theſe two things:

I. Diligence in our great work and buſineſs, that which equally concerns every man, I mean the buſineſs of religion, in order to the eternal happineſs and ſalvation of our ſouls.

II Diligence in our particular calling and charge, whatever it be.

I. Diligence in our great and general work, that which equally concerns every man, the buſineſs of religion, in order to the eternal happineſs and ſalvation of our ſouls; and this conſiſts in theſe two things:

1. In a ſincere care and endeavour of univerſal obedience to God, by the conformity of our lives and actions to his laws.

2. In caſe of ſin and miſcarriage, in a ſincere repentance for our ſins, and a timely care to be reconciled to God.

1. In a ſincere care and endeavour of univerſal obedience to God, by the conformity of our lives and actions to his will and law. And this is a great work, and requires our greateſt care and diligence to rectify our minds, to reſtrain our evil inclinations, to ſubdue and mortify our luſts, to correct the irregularity of our paſſions, to moderate and govern our appetites and affections, and to keep them within due and reaſonable bounds, to take heed to our ways, that we offend not with our tongue, nor tranſgreſs our duty by word or deed; to ſerve God with true devotion of mind, both in publick and private; to attend upon the duties of his worſhip, and to perform all acts of piety and religion, with care and conſtancy, in the ſincerity and uprightneſs of our hearts; to be meek and humble, peaceable and patient, chearful, and contented with our condition; to be ready not only to forgive injuries, but to requite them with kindneſs and good turns, to do all offices of humanity and charity to all men, according to our ability and opportunity; to inſtruct the ignorant, and to reduce thoſe that are in error to the knowledge of the truth, by wiſe counſel and good example; to endeavour to turn men from the evil of their ways, and to ſave their ſouls from death; to be ready to ſupply mens outward wants and neceſſities, to comfort them in their ſorrows, and to relieve them in their affliction and diſtreſs.

And theſe works of compaſſion and charity are, perhaps, more particularly intended here in the text; for ſo the Chaldee paraphraſe interprets theſe words of Solomon, as a precept of charity, rendering them thus: Do all thou canſt, according to thy utmoſt ability, in alms and charity: for nothing but this will turn to our account count in another world; no other way of laying out our eſtates will be of any advantage to us in the future ſtate. And tho' I do not think Solomon did here intend to exclude any part of religious practice, yet he might very well have a more eſpecial eye and regard to this, as one of the principal inſtances and beſt evidences of a true and ſincere piety, according to that of St James, chap. i. verſe laſt. Pure religion and undefiled, before God and the Father, is this, to viſit the fatherleſs and widows in their afflictions. To be ſure, our Saviour lays mighty weight upon it, by making it the great article upon which men ſhall be tried at the judgment of the great day. And, indeed, no religion is to be valued, that wants humanity and compaſſion; for, ſo far as it departs from this, it departs from the true nature of God and religion.

So that it is a vaſt work which lies upon our hands, and which every one of us, from the higheſt to the loweſt, are engaged in; this buſineſs of religion, this care of our whole man, and of our whole duty of the inward frame and diſpoſition of our minds, and of all our words and actions, to keep our hearts with all diligence, and carefully to obſerve and govern all the inclinations and motions of our ſouls, and to order our whole converſation aright; in a word, to do God all the ſervice, and men all the good, that poſſibly we can, while we are in this world. This is the firſt.

2. And becauſe, in many things, we offend all, and there is no man that ſinneth not, another part of our work and care is, in caſe of tranſgreſſion and miſcarriage in any part of our duty, to exerciſe repentance for it, that ſo we may be reconciled to God, and at peace with him.

And this is abſolutely neceſſary, becauſe our life and happineſs depends upon it, and, except we repent, we muſt periſh, and be miſerable for ever. It cannot be denied, but that this work of repentance is very harſh and unpleaſant, like the taking of phyſick, and ſearching into a wound; but, becauſe it tends to our health and ſafety, and is the neceſſary way and means to a better condition, this ſeverity muſt be ſubmitted to, if we deſire to be cured, and have a mind to be well; and the ſooner we make uſe of this remedy the better; we ſhall find ſo much the leſs difficulty and pain in the cure.

And

And there is great reaſon why we ſhould frequently exerciſe and renew our repentance, becauſe our failings are frequent, and, in one kind or other, we offend and provoke God every day: eſpecially when we are coming to the holy ſacrament, in which we ſolemnly renew our covenant with God, and promiſe him better obedience for the future; we ſhould examine our lives more ſtrictly, and call our ſins more particularly to remembrance, and exerciſe a moſt ſolemn and deep repentance for them; this is the way to keep our accounts in a good meaſure even. And this ſurely is great wiſdom, to provide that we may have no long account to make up, no great ſcores to wipe off, when we come to be overtaken by ſickneſs, and to lie upon our death-bed; that innumerable tranſgreſſions, unrepented of, may not then compaſs us about, and ſtare us in the face, and fill our ſouls with fear and confuſion, with horror and amazement in a dying hour; that an inſupportable load of guilt may not then lie upon our minds, and oppreſs our conſciences, when we are leaſt able to bear it, and moſt unfit to deal with it; when we may not have time to call our ſins particularly to remembrance, and to exerciſe a particular repentance for them, and yet perhaps a general repentance may not be ſufficient, and available with God, for the pardon and forgiveneſs of them.

Therefore, we ſhould exerciſe ourſelves much in this work of repentance in the days of our health, when we are fitteſt for it, and when it will be moſt acceptable to God, and when the ſincerity of it will be moſt evident and comfortable to us, when we may know it to be true, by the real and certain effects of it, in the change and amendment of our lives. Whereas a death-bed-repentance is infinitely hazardous, becauſe we may not perhaps have time and opportunity for the exerciſe of it; or, if we ſhould have that, yet hardly can we have opportunity for the trial of it, whether it be ſincere or not, and, conſequently, muſt needs die very uncomfortably, and in great doubt and anxiety of mind, what will be our fate and doom in another world.

So that it is a great work which lies upon our hands, and equally concerns every one of us. The buſineſs of religion, which conſiſts in the ſtrict care of our duty to

God

God and man, and in the frequent exercise of repentance, for the sins and miscarriages of our lives; and we may consequently judge, how great a care and diligence a work of so much difficulty, and of so great moment and importance, does require and call for at our hands. But, besides this, we must, in the

II. Place, likewise be diligent in our particular calling and charge, in that province and station which God hath appointed us, whatever it be; whether it consists in the labour of our hands, or in the improvement of our minds, in order to the gaining of knowledge for our own pleasure and satisfaction, and for the use and benefit of others; whether it lie in the skill of government, and the administration of public justice; or in the management of a great estate, of an honourable rank and quality above others, to the best advantage, for the honour of God, and the benefit and advantage of men, so as, by the influence of our power and estate, and by the authority of our example, to contribute all we can to the welfare and happiness of others.

For it is a great mistake to think that any man is without a calling, and that God does not expect that every one of us should employ himself in doing good in one kind or other. Some persons, indeed, by the privilege of their birth and quality, are above a common trade and profession; but they are not hereby either exempted or excused from all business, and allowed to live unprofitably to others, because they are so plentifully provided for themselves: nay, on the contrary, they have so much the greater obligation, having the liberty and leisure to attend the good of others; the higher our character and station is, we have the better opportunities of being publickly useful and beneficial; and the heavier will our account be, if we neglect these opportunities. Those who are in a low and private condition, can only shine to a few; but they that are advanced to a great height above others, may, like the heavenly bodies, dispense a general light and influence, and scatter happiness and blessings among all that are below them.

And, as they are capable of doing more good than others, so with more ease and effect; that which persons of an inferior rank can hardly bring others to, by all the importunity importunity of counſel and perſuaſion, as, namely, to the practice of any virtue, and the quitting and abandoning of any vice, a prince and a great man that is good himſelf, may eaſily gain them to, without ever ſpeaking a word to them, by the ſilent authority and powerful allurement of his example. So that though every man have not a particular profeſſion, yet the higheſt among men have ſome employment allotted to them by God, ſuitable to their condition, a province which he expects they ſhould adminiſter and adorn with great care.

The great buſineſs of the lower part of mankind is to provide for themſelves the neceſſaries of life, and it is well if they can do it with all their care and diligence; but thoſe who are of a higher rank, their proper buſineſs and employment is to diſpenſe good to others; which ſurely is a much happier condition and employment, according to that admirable ſaying of our Saviour, mentioned by St Paul, It is a more bleſſed thing to give, than to receive. Thoſe of meaner condition can only be men to one another, and it were well if they would be ſo; but he that is highly raiſed and advanced above others, hath the happy opportunity in his hands, if he have but the heart to make uſe of it, to be a kind of God to men.

Let no man then, of what birth, or rank, or quality ſoever, think it beneath him to ſerve God, and to be uſeful to the benefit and advantage of men; let us remember the Son of God, a perſon of the higheſt quality and extraction that ever was, who ſpent himſelf wholly in this bleſſed work of doing good, toiled and laboured in it as it had been for his life, ſubmitted to all the circumſtances of meanneſs, to all the degrees of contempt, to all kind of hardſhip and ſufferings, for the benefit and ſalvation of men, ſweat drops of blood, and, at laſt, poured it all forth in full ſtreams, to ſave us from eternal miſery and ruin; and is any of us better than the Son of God, the heir of all things, and the elder brother of us all? ſhall any of us, after this, think ourſelves too good to be employed in that work which God himſelf diſdained not to do, when he appeared in the likeneſs and nature of man!

If we would esteem things rightly, and according to reason, the true privilege and advantage of greatness is, to be able to do more good than others; and in this the majesty and felicity of God himself doth chiefly consist, in his ready and forward inclination, and in his infinite power and ability to do good. The creation of the world was a great and glorious design, but this God only calls his work; but to preserve and support the creatures which he hath made, to bless them and to do them good, to govern them by wise laws, and to conduct them to that happiness which he designed for them, this is his rest, his perpetual sabbath, his great delight and satisfaction to all eternity; to do good is our duty and our business, but it is likewise the greatest pleasure and recreation, that which refresheth the heart of God and man.

I have insisted the longer upon this, that those who are thought to be above any calling, and to have no obligation upon them, but to please themselves, may be made sensible, that, according to their ability and opportunity, they have a great work upon their hands, and more business to do than other men; which, if they would but seriously mind, they would not only please God, but, I dare say, satisfy and please themselves, much better than they do in any other course. I know it is a duty particularly incumbent upon the lower part of mankind, to be diligent in their particular calling, that so they may provide for themselves and their families; but this is not so proper for this place, and if it were, the necessity of human life will probably prompt and urge men more powerfully to this, than any argument and persuasion that I can use. I proceed therefore, in the Second place, to offer some considerations to excite our care and diligence in this great work, which God hath given us to do in this world, I mean chiefly the business of religion, in order to the eternal happiness and salvation of our souls. And to this purpose, I shall offer five or six arguments, reserving the great motive and consideration in the text to the last, Because there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom, in the grave, whither thou goest.

I. Let

I. Let us conſider the nature of our work, which is ſuch as may both excite and encourage our diligence and care about it. It is indeed a ſervice, but ſuch as is our perfect freedom; it is the ſervice of God, whom to ſerve is the greateſt honour that man or any other creature is capable of; it is obedience, but even obedience, conſidering our ignorance and frailty, is much wiſer and ſafer for us, than a total exemption from all law and rule; for the laws which God hath given us, are not impoſed upon us merely for his will and pleaſure, but chiefly for our benefit and advantage. So that to obey and pleaſe God, is in truth nothing elſe but to do thoſe things which are really beſt for ourſelves.

Beſides, that this work of religion will abundantly recompenſe all the labour and pains it can coſt, if we conſider the fruit and end of it, which is the ſalvation of our ſouls. So St Paul aſſures us, Rom. vi. 22. that if we have our fruit unto holineſs, our end ſhall be everlaſting life. Nay, this work doth not want its preſent encouragement and reward, if we conſider the peace and pleaſure which attend it. Great peace, ſaith David, have they which love thy law, and nothing ſhall offend them. Religion doth not deſign to rob men of the true delights of life, of any lawful pleaſure and enjoyment; it only appoints them their due place, and ſeaſon, and meaſure, without which they cannot be truly taſteful and pleaſant: if we make pleaſure and recreation our buſineſs, it will become a burden, and leave a ſting behind it; but if we make it our great buſineſs to be good, and to do good, we ſhall then take true pleaſure in our recreations and refreſhments, we ſhall eat our bread with joy, and drink our wine with a merry heart, as Solomon expreſſeth it a little before the text. Religion doth not ordinarily debar men of any contentment, which they can wiſely and ſafely take, in any of the enjoyments of this life; but directs us to do thoſe things which will yield the trueſt and moſt refined pleaſure, and ſo governs us in the uſe and enjoyment of worldly comforts, that there ſhall be no bitterneſs in them, or after them: and, in truth, after all our ſearch and enquiry after pleaſure and happineſs, we ſhall find, that there is no ſolid and laſting pleaſure, but in living righteouſly and religiouſly; and the pleaſure of this is ſo great, that a Heathen philoſopher, ſpeaking of a virtuous life, according to the true precepts of philoſophy, breaks out into this rapture and tranſport concerning the wonderful pleaſure of it, Vel unus dies, vere et ex præceptis tuis actus, peccandi immortalitati eſt anteferendus: "Even "one day truly ſpent, according to thy precepts, is to "be valued above an immortality of ſinning." There is no life ſo pleaſant as that of the pious and good man, who being contented with himſelf, every thing about him contributes to his chearfulneſs: Gratior it dies, et ſoles melius nitent; "The day paſſeth more pleaſantly, and the "ſun ſhines brighter to him;" and every object which he beholds is more delightful, becauſe the man is at peace and eaſe within himſelf.

II. Let us conſider how great our work is, and then we ſhall eaſily be convinced what care it requires, what diligence it calls for from us. Very few perſons, I doubt, are ſufficiently ſenſible, how much thought and conſideration, how much care and vigilancy, how firm a reſolution and earneſt attention of mind is neceſſary to the buſineſs of religion, to the due cultivating and improving of our minds, to the mortifying and ſubduing of our luſts, to the maſtering and governing of our paſſions, to the reforming of our tempers, to the correcting of all the irregularities of our appetites and affections, and to the reducing of our crooked wills, which have been long obſtinately bent the wrong way, to the ſtraightneſs of that rule which God hath given us to walk by.

Few, I fear, conſider how much pains is neceſſary to the ſtoring of our minds with good principles, and to the fixing and rivetting in our ſouls all the proper motives and conſiderations to engage us to virtue, that in all the occaſions of our lives they may have their due force and influence upon us. Few of us take pains to underſtand the juſt bounds and limits of our duty, and ſo to attend thereto, as to be always upon our guard againſt the infinite temptations of human life, and the many malicious enemies of our ſouls, that we may not be circumvented by the wiles of the devil, nor caught in thoſe ſnares which he lays before us in our ways, that we may not be wrought upon by the insinuations, nor over-reached by the deceitfulness, of sin.

How few consider what care and watchfulness of ourselves, what constancy and fervency of prayer to God, is necessary to the due discharge of every part of our duty; or to the right exercise of every grace and virtue! Besides an earnest imploring of the divine assistance, there is required likewise a particular care and application of mind, that we may fail in no point; and that, as St James expresseth it, we may be entire, wanting nothing; that our faith and our hope, our devotion and our charity, our humility and our patience, and every other grace, may be exercised in the best manner, and have its proper work.

III. Consider, what incredible pains men will take, what diligence they will use for bad purposes, and for ends infinitely less considerable. Ut jugulent homines, surgunt de nocte latrones; ut teipsum serves, non expergiscere? "Thieves will rise and travel by night to rob "and kill, and shall we use no care, no vigilance, to "save ourselves?" What drudges and slaves are many men to their sensual pleasures and lusts? how hot and fierce upon revenge? and what hazards will they run to satisfy this unreasonable and deviliſh passion; and thereby to make way for a speedy and bitter repentance, which always treads upon the heels of revenge? for no sooner hath any man executed his rage upon another, but his conscience presently turns it upon himself.

How industrious do we see men at their recreations and sports, taking really more pains for the sake of pleasure, than the poor man does that works for his living?

What a violent thirst, and insatiable covetousness possesseth some men after learning and knowledge? how will they toil and watch, wear out their eyes, and waste their spirits, and pursue their studies, not only with the neglect of fitting diversion, but even of the necessary support and reparation of nature, by meat and sleep? nay, many times, to increase their learning, they weaken their understandings; and for the gaining of more knowledge, do disable that power and faculty which should make use of it when they have it.

How will men attend for several hours to a lewd and extravagant play, and sit not only with patience, but with delight, to hear things spoken, which are neither fit to be spoken nor heard?

And, above all, how eager and earnest, how busy and industrious are a great part of mankind, in the pursuit of their ambitious and covetous designs? How sorely will they labour and travel? how hardly will they be contented to fare, and how meanly will they live themselves, to make they know not whom rich; even any body that happens to come in their way, when they make their last wills?

And are men at all this pains for compassing of their low and mean, of their vile and wicked designs, to do themselves no good; nay, for the most part, to hurt and destroy themselves; and are the present pleasures and satisfaction of our minds, and eternal life and happiness in another world, things of no value and esteem with us? is salvation itself so slight and inconsiderable a thing, that it deserves none of this care and diligence to be used for the obtaining of it?

IV. Consider, that when we come to die, nothing will yield more true and solid consolation to us, than the remembrance of an useful and well-spent life, a life of great labour and diligence, of great zeal and faithfulness in the service of God; and, on the contrary, with what grief and regret shall we look back upon all those precious hours which we have so fondly misplaced in sin and vanity? how shall we then wish that we could recall them, and live them over again, that we might spend them better? all that time which now lies upon our hands, and we know not how to bestow it and pass it away, will then most assuredly lie heavy upon our consciences. What anguish and confusion have I seen in the looks and speeches of a dying man, caused only by the grievous remembrance of an unprofitable and ill-spent life! So foolish are many men, as never seriously to think for what end they came into the world, till they are just ready to go out of it.

V. Consider,

V. Conſider, that the degrees of our happineſs in another world will certainly bear a proportion to the degrees of our diligence and induſtry, in ſerving God and doing good. And it is an argument of a mean ſpirit, not to aſpire after the beſt and happieſt condition which is to be attained by us. To be contented barely to live, when by our pains and induſtry we may become conſiderable, and raiſe ourſelves above the common level of men, is a ſign of a poor and degenerate mind; ſo is it in the buſineſs of religion, to be contented with any low degrees of virtue and goodneſs, and conſequently of glory and happineſs, when, by a great diligence and induſtry in ſerving our generation according to the will of God, we may be of the number of thoſe whoſe reward ſhall be great in heaven, and have a place there, among thoſe righteous perſons, who ſhall ſhine as the ſun in the kingdom of their Father.

Beſides, that it may prove a thing of dangerous conſequence to us, to deal thus ſtrictly with God, and to drive ſo near and hard a bargain with him; we may eaſily miſs of happineſs and come ſhort of heaven, if we only deſign juſt to get thither; we may be miſtaken in the degree of holineſs and virtue, which is neceſſary to recommend us to the divine favour and acceptance, and to make us capable of the glorious reward of eternal life: for unto whomſoever much is given, ſaith our Saviour, of him much ſhall be required; to him that hath only one talent committed to him, it may be ſufficient to have gained one; but he that hath many talents entruſted with him, may gain one, and yet be a wicked and ſlothful ſervant; proportionably to our advantages and opportunities, our duty increaſeth upon our hands, and better and greater things may juſtly be expected from us. The conſideration whereof ſhould make us unwearied in our endeavours of doing good, and ſtedfaſt and unmoveable, and always abounding in the work of the Lord, for as much as we know that our labour ſhall not be in vain in the Lord.

VI. and laſtly, Let us conſider the argument here in the text, There is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wiſdom in the grave, whither we are going. Longæ quieſcendi tempora fata debunt. We ſhall then reſt from our labours, and our works will follow us. This life is the time of our activity and working, the next is the ſeaſon of retribution and recompence; we ſhall then have nothing to do, but either to reap and enjoy the comfort of well-doing, or to repent the folly of an ill-ſpent life, and the irreparable miſchief which thereby we have brought upon ourſelves: There is no work nor wiſdom in the grave, whither thou goeſt; intimating, that our life is a continual journey towards the grave, ſhorter or longer as God pleaſeth; and many times, when we think ourſelves far from it, we may be juſt upon it, and ready to ſtumble into it. So that our time of working may be very ſhort, to be ſure it is very uncertain.

And it is very well worth our conſideration, that as there is no work nor wiſdom in the grave, ſo there is very little to be exerciſed when we come to draw near to it, whether it be by ſickneſs or old age: ſufficient, ſurely, for that day will be the evil thereof. We had need then to have nothing elſe to do, but to be old and weak, to be ſick and die; we ſhall find that to be burden and trouble enough.

Let us therefore work the work of him that ſent us into the world, while it is day: for the night cometh, ſaith our Saviour, (by which may probably be meant the time of ſickneſs or old age), the night cometh when no man can work; ſo that what we do, we muſt do quickly, mind the work which is before us, and ply it with all our might, as if it were the laſt opportunity we ſhould ever have; and ſo it may prove for ought we know, for it is ten to one but that ſome here preſent, and God knows which of us it may be, may now have the laſt opportunity in our hands, and that but a ſlippery hold of it, and may never have this counſel given us again, nor, perhaps, be long in a capacity to make uſe of it; for, when death hath once overtaken us, it will fix us in an unchangeable ſtate; as the tree falls, ſo it ſhall lie.

This is the time of our work and preparation for another world, and what we do towards it in this life, will avail us in the other; but if this opportunity be neglected, there is nothing to be done by us afterwards, but to inherit the fruit of our own folly and neglect; to ſit down in everlaſting ſorrow, and to be immutably fixed in that miſerable ferable ſtate, which, whilſt we were in this world, we could never be perſuaded to take any tolerable care to avoid.

And if we can do nothing for ourſelves to help and relieve us in that ſtate, much leſs can we think it can be done for us by others, by the conſigning of maſſes and prayers, of merits and indulgences, to our uſe and benefit in another world. No; ſo ſoon as ever we are paſſed into the other ſtate, we ſhall enter upon a condition of happineſs or miſery, that is never to be altered. So that this life is the proper ſeaſon for wiſdom to ſhew itſelf, and to exerciſe our beſt induſtry for the attaining of happineſs: it will be too late afterwards to think of altering or bettering our condition; for death will conclude and determine our ſtate one way or other, and what we are when we leave the world, good or bad, fitted for happineſs or miſery, we ſhall remain and continue ſo for ever.

Therefore it infinitely concerns all of us, to exerciſe our beſt wiſdom in this preſent life, and what we have to do for our ſouls, and for all eternity, to do it with all our might; to contrive and uſe the beſt means to be happy, while the opportunity of doing it is yet in our hands; we may eaſily let it ſlip, but no care, no wiſdom, no diligence, no repentance, can retrieve it; when it is once loſt, it is loſt for ever.

Hear then the concluſion of the whole matter. Would we enjoy ourſelves, and the peace of our minds while we live? would we have good hopes and comfort in our death, and after death would we be happy for ever? let us lay the foundation of all this, in the activity and induſtry of a religious and holy life; a life of unſpotted purity and temperance in the uſe of ſenſual pleaſures, of ſincere piety and devotion towards God, of ſtrict juſtice and integrity, and of goodneſs and charity towards men.

And let us conſider, that many of us are a great way already on our journey towards the grave, that our day is declining apace, and the ſhadows of the evening begin to be ſtretched out; therefore that little of our life, which is yet behind us, ſhould be precious to us, ut eſſe ſolis gratius lumen ſolet, jam jam cadentis; we ſhould improve that which yet remains, as it were for our lives, always remembering that our only opportunity of working, of deſigning and doing great and happy things for ourſelves, is on this ſide the grave, and that this opportunity will expire and die with us: For there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wiſdom in the grave, whither we are going.

Now, God of his infinite mercy grant, that we may all of us know, in this our day, the things which belong to our preſent peace, and future happineſs, before they be hid from our eyes, for his mercy's ſake in Jeſus Chriſt; to whom with thee, O Father, and the Holy Ghoſt, be all honour and glory, thankſgiving and praiſe, now and for evermore.

SERMON CCXIII.

Of the bleſſedneſs of giving, more than that of receiving

Acts xx. 35.

And to remember the words of the Lord Jeſus, how he ſaid, It is more bleſſed to give, than to receive.

The whole verſe runs thus:

I have ſhewed you all things, how that ſo labouring ye ought to ſupport the weak, and to remember the words of the Lord Jeſus, how he ſaid, It is more bleſſed to give, than to receive.

THE words which I have read to you have this particular advantage to recommend them to our more attentive conſideration, that they are a remarkable ſaying of our Lord himſelf, not recorded by any of the evangeliſts among his other ſayings and diſcourſes, but remembered by the apoſtles, and by ſome ſome of them delivered to St Paul, and by him preſerved to us in his farewell-ſpeech to the elders of Epheſus. In which, after he had given them ſome needful advice, and commended them to the grace of God, he appeals to them concerning the integrity of his converſation among them; that he was ſo far from ſeeking his own advantage, and from coveting any thing that was theirs, that he had not only ſupported himſelf, but alſo relieved others by the labour of his own hands; giving them herein a great example of charity, which, it ſeems, he was wont to enforce upon them by an excellent ſaying of our Lord, It is more bleſſed to give, than to receive.

And it is really a particular endearment of this ſaying to us, that, being omitted by the evangeliſts, and in danger of being loſt and forgotten, it was ſo happily retrieved by St Paul, and recorded by St Luke. The common ſayings of ordinary perſons periſh without regard, and are ſpilt like water upon the ground, which no body goes about to gather up; but the little and ſhort ſayings of wiſe and excellent men are of great value, like the duſt of gold, or the leaſt ſparks of diamonds. And ſuch is this ſaying of our Lord, which is not only valuable, out of reſpect to its author, but for the ſake of that admirable ſenſe which is contained in it.

Some interpreters have needleſly troubled themſelves to find theſe words, or ſomething equivalent to them, in the goſpel. That the ſenſe of them may be inferred from ſeveral paſſages in the goſpel, none will deny; but that they are either expreſly to be found there, or that there is any ſaying that ſounds to the ſame ſenſe, I think no body can ſhew. Beſides, that St Paul cites a particular ſentence or ſaying of our Lord, that was ῥητῶς, and in thoſe very words ſpoken by him.

And there is no reaſon to imagine, that the goſpels are a perfect and exact account of all the ſayings and actions of our Lord, though St Luke calls his goſpel, A treatiſe of all things that Jeſus did and ſpake; that is, of the principal actions of his life, and the ſubſtance of his diſcourſes, at leaſt ſo much of them as is needful for us to know: for St Luke leaves out ſeveral things related by the other evangeliſts. And St John expreſly tells us, that Jeſus did innumerable things not recorded in the hiſtory of his life: and there is no doubt but the diſciples of our Lord remembered many particular ſayings of his, not ſet down in the goſpels, which, upon occaſion, they did relate and communicate to others, as they did this to St Paul.

The words themſelves are the propoſition I ſhall ſpeak to, It is a more bleſſed thing to give, than to receive. This, I know, ſeems a paradox to moſt men, who know no happineſs but in hoarding up what they have, and in receiving and heaping up more; but as ſtrange as this ſaying may appear, the ſenſe of it is owned and aſſented to by thoſe great oracles of reaſon, the wiſeſt and moſt conſiderate Heathens; τῆς ἀρετῆς μᾶλλον τὸ εὖ ποιεῖν ἢ τὸ εὖ πάσχειν, "It is a more virtuous thing to do than to re-"ceive good," ſays Ariſtotle; which, according to his opinion, was to ſay, it is a greater happineſs, becauſe he placed happineſs in the practice and exerciſe of virtue. To the ſame purpoſe is that ſaying of Plutarch, εὖ ποιεῖν ἥδιόν ἐστιν ἢ πάσχειν. "There is more pleaſure in doing a kind-"neſs, than in taking one." And that of Seneca, Malim non recipere beneficia, quam non dare: "Of the "two, I had rather not receive benefits, than not be-"ſtow them." And that the Heathen have ſpoken things to the ſame ſenſe with this ſaying of our Saviour's, is ſo far from being any prejudice to this ſaying of our Saviour, that it is a great commendation of it, as being an argument that our Saviour hath herein ſaid nothing, but what is very agreeable to the beſt notions of our minds, and to the higheſt reaſon and wiſdom of mankind. In the handling of this propoſition, I ſhall do theſe two things.

Firſt, Endeavour to convince men of the truth and reaſonableneſs of it.

Secondly, To perſuade men to act ſuitably to it.

Firſt, To convince men of the truth and reaſonableneſs of this principle, that it is more bleſſed to give than to receive. And this will fully appear by conſidering theſe three things.

I. That it is an argument of a more happy ſpirit and temper.

II. Of

II. Of a more happy ſtate and conditition. And,

III. That it ſhall have the happineſs of a greater reward.

I. To be governed by this principle, is an argument of a more happy ſpirit and temper. To do good, to be uſeful and beneficial to others, to be of a kind and obliging diſpoſition, of a tender and compaſſionate ſpirit, ſenſible of the ſtraits and miſeries of others, ſo as to be ready to eaſe and relieve them, (for to this kind of goodneſs and charity the Apoſtle applies this ſaying of our Saviour, as appears by the context) this certainly is the happieſt ſpirit and temper in the world; and is an argument of a noble, and generous, and large heart, that is not contracted within itſelf, and confined to little and narrow deſigns, and takes care of nobody but itſelf, envying that others ſhould ſhare with it, and partake of its happineſs; but is free and open, ready to do good, and willing to communicate, and thinks its own happineſs increaſed, by making others happy.

It is the property of narrow and envious ſpirits to think their own happineſs the greater, becauſe they have it alone to themſelves; but the nobleſt and moſt heavenly diſpoſitions deſire that others ſhould ſhare with them in it. Of all beings God is the fartheſt removed from envy and ill-will; and the nearer any creature approacheth to him, the farther it is from this helliſh diſpoſition. For it is the temper of the devil to grudge happineſs to others; he envied that man ſhould be in paradiſe, and was reſtleſs till he had got him out.

Some perfections are of a more ſolitary nature and diſpoſition, and ſhine brighteſt when they are attained to but by few, as knowledge and power: but the nature of goodneſs is to diffuſe and communicate itſelf, and the more it is communicated, the more glorious it is. And therefore knowledge and power may be in a nature moſt contrary to God's; the devil hath theſe perfections in a high degree.

To receive good from others, is no certain argument of virtue or merit, for the unworthy and unthankful often receive benefits; but to be good and do good, is the excellency of virtue, becauſe it is to reſemble God in that which is the moſt amiable and glorious of all his other perfections. And therefore, when Moſes deſires to ſee God's glory, Exod. xxxiii. 19. he tells him, that he will cauſe all his goodneſs to paſs before him. Without goodneſs the power and wiſdom of God would be terrible, and raiſe great dread and ſuperſtition in the minds of men. Without goodneſs, power would be tyranny and oppreſſion, and wiſdom would degenerate into craft and miſchievous contrivance. So that a being endowed with all power and wiſdom, and yet wanting goodneſs, would be a dreadful and omnipotent miſchief. We are apt to dread power, and to admire knowledge, and to ſuſpect great wiſdom and prudence; but we can heartily love and reverence nothing but true goodneſs. It is not the infinite power and knowledge of God, conſidered abſtractedly, and in themſelves, but theſe in conjunction with his great goodneſs, that make him at once the moſt awful and amiable being in the world; which is the reaſon why our Saviour, Matth. v. 48. ſpeaks of the mercy, and goodneſs, and patience of God, as the top and ſum of the divine perfections. Be ye therefore perfect, as your Father which is in heaven is perfect. How is that? in being good to the evil and unthankful, as God is, who makes his ſun to riſe, and his rain to fall, not only on the juſt but unjuſt. And therefore St Luke renders it, Be ye therefore merciful, as your Father which is in heaven is merciful. To be good and merciful as God is, is to be perfect as he is; becauſe it is to imitate him in that which is his chief perfection.

Gratitude is one of the nobleſt virtues, and our goodneſs to men is gratitude in us to God. It is an acknowledgment of the bleſſings we have received from God; the beſt uſe we can make of them, and the beſt requital we can make to him for all his benefits. For we can give him nothing again, becauſe he ſtands in need of nothing. But a truly grateful perſon, who hath a kindneſs done to him by one that is out of all capacity and reach of requital, will inquire whether there be any of his family and relations, to whom he may ſhew kindneſs for his ſake. Yea, benefits have often been requited by thankful perſons, upon thoſe who did but reſemble their benefactors, though they were nowiſe related to them. Though we can do nothing to

God,

God, yet we may do it to men, who are made after the image of God. We may ſhew kindneſs to his relations, and to thoſe of his houſehold and family, to his creatures, to his ſervants, to his friends, and to his children here in the earth.

Beſides that our goodneſs to others like ourſelves, is an argument of great conſideration and prudence; it is a ſign that we know ourſelves, and conſider what we are and what we may be; it ſhews, that we have a due ſenſe of the indigence and infirmity of human nature, and of the change and viciſſitude of human affairs; it is a juſt ſenſe and acknowledgment of our ſtate, that we are inſufficient for our own happineſs, and muſt depend upon the kindneſs and good-will, and friendſhip of other men; that we all either do or may ſtand in need of others one time or other: for he who is now in the greateſt plenty and abundance of all things, and thinks his mountain ſo ſtrong, that he can never be moved, may, by a ſudden revolution of fortune, by a thouſand accidents, be thrown down from his height of proſperity, into the depth of miſery and neceſſity.

And as it is an argument of conſideration, ſo of great prudence. He that is good to others, apt to commiſerate their ſad caſe, and to relieve them in their ſtraits, takes the wiſeſt and ſureſt way that can be, to incline and engage others to be good to him, when it ſhall fall to his lot to ſtand in need of their kindneſs and pity. Upon this account our Saviour commends the prudence of the unjuſt ſteward, who laid in for the kindneſs of others, againſt himſelf ſhould have occaſion for it.

And though it ſhould happen otherwiſe, and that we ſhould have an uninterrupted tenor of proſperity, which few or none have, or that coming to ſtand in need of others, our kindneſs ſhould meet with no equal returns, yet it would not be quite loſt: for, as Seneca truly ſays, delectat etiam ſterilis beneficii conſcientia; though our charity ſhould fall upon ſtony and barren ground, and we ſhould find no fruit of it from thoſe whom we have obliged, yet there is a pleaſure in being conſcious to ourſelves, that we have done well, what was worthy and generous, and what became wiſe and conſiderate men to do, whatever the event and ſucceſs be: for ſetting aſide all ſelfiſh reſpects, purely out of humanity and charity, and a generous compaſſion, we ſhould be ready, as we have opportunity, to do good to all that ſtand in need of our kindneſs and help.

So that a diſpoſition to do good is the beſt and happieſt temper of mind, becauſe it is the neareſt reſemblance of the divine nature, which is perfectly happy: it is a grateful acknowledgment of our obligations to God, and all that we can render to him for his benefits; it is an argument of great wiſdom and conſideration; it gives eaſe and ſatisfaction to our minds: and the reflection upon any good that we have done, is certainly the greateſt contentment and pleaſure in the world, and a felicity much beyond that of the greateſt fortune of this world: whereas the ſpirit contrary to this, is always uneaſy to itſelf; the envious and malicious, the hard-hearted and ill-natured man, carries his own torment and hell about him, his mind is full of tumultuous agitations and unquiet thoughts: but, were our nature rectified, and brought back to its primitive frame and temper, we ſhould take no ſuch pleaſure in any thing as in acts of kindneſs and compaſſion, which are ſo ſuitable and agreeable to our nature, that they are peculiarly called humanity, as if without this temper we were not truly men, but ſomething elſe diſguiſed under a human ſhape.

II. To give, is an argument of a more happy ſtate and condition than to receive. To receive from others is an argument of indigency, and plainly ſhews that we are in want and neceſſity; either that we ſtand in need of ſomething, or that we think we do; and either of theſe conditions is far from perfect happineſs: but to give is an argument of fulneſs and ſufficiency, that we have more than is neceſſary for ourſelves, and ſomething to ſpare.

To receive kindneſs from others, ſuppoſeth we ſtand in need of it; and to ſtand in need of it, is to be in a ſtate of being obliged and indebted. Obligation is a dear thing, and a real debt, which lies heavy and uneaſy upon a grateful mind: ſo much obligation as any man hath to another, ſo much he hath loſt of his own liberty and freedom; for it gives him that hath obliged us, a ſuperiority and advantage over us. And what Solomon ſays of the borrower, that he is a ſervant to the lender, is in proportion true in this caſe, that the receiver is a ſervant to the giver.

But to be able to benefit others, is a condition of freedom and ſuperiority, and is ſo far from impairing our liberty, that it ſhews our power: and the happineſs which we confer upon others, by doing them good, is not only a contentment to ourſelves, but we do in ſome ſort enjoy the happineſs we give, in being conſcious to ourſelves that we are the authors of it. And could we but once come to this excellent temper, to delight in the good that others enjoy, as if it were our own, (and it is our own, if we be the inſtruments of it, and take pleaſure in it); I ſay, could we but once come to this temper, we need not envy the wealth and ſplendor of the moſt proſperous upon earth; for upon theſe terms the happineſs of the whole world would in ſome ſort be ours, and we ſhould have a ſhare in the pleaſure and ſatisfaction of all that good which happens to any man any way, eſpecially by our means.

To depend upon another, and to receive from him, and to be beholden to him, is the neceſſary imperfection of creatures: but to confer benefits upon others, is to reſemble God, and to approach towards divinity. Ariſtotle could ſay, that by narrowneſs and ſelfiſhneſs, by envy and ill-will, men degenerate into beaſts, and become wolves and tygers to one another; but by goodneſs and kindneſs, by mutual compaſſion and helpfulneſs, men become gods to one another. To be a benefactor, is to be as like God as it is poſſible for men to be; and the more any one partakes of this divine quality and diſpoſition, the liker and nearer he is to God, who is good to all, and whoſe tender mercies are over all his works.

The bleſſed angels, who behold the face of God continually, are, as it were, perfectly transformed into the image of the divine goodneſs, and therefore the work which with ſo much chearfulneſs and vigour they employ themſelves in, is to be miniſtring ſpirits for the good of the elect, to bring men to goodneſs, and to encourage, and aſſiſt, and comfort them in well-doing.

And our bleſſed Lord, when he was upon earth, did in nothing ſhew himſelf more like the Son of God than, in going about doing good. And the wonderful works which he did, gave teſtimony of his divinity, not ſo much as they were acts of power as of goodneſs, and wrought for the benefit and advantage of men. And the true advantage of greatneſs, and wealth, and power, does not conſiſt in this, that it ſets men above others, but that it puts them in a capacity of doing more good than others. Men are apt to call them their betters, who are higher and richer than themſelves: but in a true and juſt eſteem of things, they only are our betters who do more good than we. From the meaneſt creature below us, up to God himſelf, they are the beſt, and happieſt, and moſt perfect beings, who are moſt uſeful and beneficial to others, who have the moſt power and ſtrongeſt inclinations to do good.

III. To give, that is, to be beneficial and to do good to others, hath the happineſs of a great reward. There is no grace or virtue whatſoever, which hath in ſcripture the encouragement of more and greater promiſes than this, of happineſs in general; of temporal happineſs in this life; of happineſs at death; and of everlaſting happineſs in the world to come.

1. For promiſes of happineſs in general. He hath diſperſed, he hath given to the poor, his righteouſneſs endures for ever, that is, ſhall never be forgotten, ſhall not paſs unrewarded. Prov. xiv. 21. He that giveth to the poor, happy is he. Matth. v. 7. Bleſſed are the merciful, for they ſhall obtain mercy. Luke vi. 38. Give, and it ſhall be given unto you; good meaſure, preſſed down, and ſhaken together, and running over, ſhall men give into your boſom: for with the ſame meaſure that ye mete withal, it ſhall be meaſured to you again; that is, according to our goodneſs and compaſſion towards others, we muſt expect to find the charity of men, and the compaſſions of God towards us. Job ſpeaks as if ſome eminent and peculiar bleſſing did attend and follow acts of charity, Job xxix. 13. The bleſſing of him that was ready to periſh came upon me.

2. Promiſes of temporal happineſs in this life. Pſal. xxxvii. 3. Truſt in the Lord, and do good: ſo ſhalt thou dwell in the land, and verily thou ſhalt be fed. Prov. xxviii. 27. He that giveth to the poor, ſhall not lack. Nay, God hath promiſed to have a particular reſpect to ſuch as do good, in every condition, and all kinds of troubles that befal them. Pſal. xli. 1, 2, 3. Bleſſed is he that conſidereth the poor: the Lord will deliver him in time of trouble. The Lord will preſerve him, and keep him alive, and he ſhall be bleſſed upon the earth; and thou wilt not deliver him unto the will of his enemies. The Lord will ſtrengthen him upon the bed of languiſhing: thou wilt make all his bed in his ſickneſs.

3. Of happineſs in death. The righteous, ſaith Solomon, Prov. xiv. 32. hath hope in his death. By the righteous in ſcripture is frequently meant the merciful and good man. And ſo it is to be underſtood, as appears from the context; He that oppreſſeth the poor, reproacheth his maker: but he that honoureth him, hath mercy upon the poor. The wicked is driven away in his wickedneſs; but the righteous hath hope in his death. If God deſign to ſend calamities upon the earth, upon the place where the good man lives, which it would grieve him to ſee, or which he might be involved in, ſo as either to make his life uncomfortable, or to cut him off by a violent death; God conſiders the merciful man, and removes him out of the way, into a better and ſafer place, Iſ. lvii. 1. The merciful man is taken away from the evil to come.

4. The promiſes of eternal life and happineſs in the world to come. Luke xiv. 13, 14. But when thou makeſt a feaſt, call the poor, the maimed, the lame, and the blind: and thou ſhalt be bleſſed. For they cannot recompenſe thee; for thou ſhalt be recompenſed at the reſurrection of the juſt. And chap. xvi. 9. And I ſay unto you, ſaith our Lord, Make to yourſelves friends of the mammon of unrighteouſneſs, that is, do good with what you have, that when ye fail, they may receive you unto everlaſting habitations. 1 Tim. vi. 17, 18, 19. Charge them that are rich in this world, that they be not high-minded, nor truſt in uncertain riches; but in the living God, who giveth us richly all things to enjoy; that they do good, that they be rich in good works, ready to diſtribute, willing

ing to communicate, laying up in ſtore for themſelves a good foundation againſt the time to come, that they may lay hold on eternal life. And the more to fix upon our minds the neceſſity of doing good, eſpecially in ways of mercy and charity, our Lord repreſents this as the great matter of enquiry, at the great day of judgment, how they have behaved themſelves in this kind, what good they have done, or omitted and neglected to do; eſpecially to thoſe who were in mifery and want; and as if the ſentence of eternal happineſs or miſery would accordingly paſs upon them. And this, methinks, ſhould make a mighty impreſſion upon us, to think that when we ſhall appear before the great judge of the world, we are to expect mercy from him, according to the meaſure that we have ſhewed it to others.

And now, if men be thoroughly convinced of the happineſs of this temper, methinks it ſhould be no difficult matter to perſuade them to it. If we believe this ſaying of our Lord, that it is more bleſſed to give, than to receive; let us do accordingly.

I know that to carnal and earthly-minded men, this muſt needs ſeem a new and wrong way to happineſs. For if we may judge of mens perſuaſions by their practice, which ſeems to be a reaſonable and good ſure way of judging, I am afraid it will appear, that few believe this to be the way to happineſs. If we mind the courſe of the world, and the actions of men, it is but too evident that moſt men place their greateſt felicity in receiving and getting the good things of this world; almoſt all ſeek their own things, and but few the good of others. Many ſay, Who will ſhew us; who will do us any good? but few aſk that queſtion, What good thing ſhall I do that I may inherit eternal life? And when our Lord tells men that they muſt give to the poor, if they would have treaſure in heaven; that they muſt be charitable, if they would be happy; that it is a more bleſſed thing to give, than to receive; theſe are ſad and melancholy ſayings to thoſe who have great poſſeſſions; and moſt men are ready, with the young man in the goſpel, to part with our Lord, and to break with him upon theſe terms.

But

But let us remember that this was the ſaying of our Lord Jeſus, whom we all profeſs to believe, and to imitate in all things: but more eſpecially let us do ſo in this, becauſe it was not a bare ſpeculation, a fine and glorious ſaying, like thoſe of the philoſophers, who ſaid great and glorious things, but did them not; but this was his conſtant practice, the great work and buſineſs of his life. He who pronounced it the moſt bleſſed thing to do good, ſpent his whole life in this work, and went about doing good. To this end all his activity and endeavours were bent. This was the life which God himſelf, when he was pleaſed to become man, thought fit to lead in the world, giving us herein an example that we ſhould follow his ſteps. He made full trial and experience of the happineſs of this temper and ſpirit; for he was all on the giving hand. He would receive no portion and ſhare of the good things of this world. He refuſed the greateſt offers. When the people would have made him a king, he withdrew and hid himſelf. He was contented to be worſe accommodated than the creatures below us. The foxes have holes, and the birds of the air have neſts: but the Son of man had not where to lay his head. He would not ſo much as have any fixed abode and habitation, that he might be at liberty to go about doing good. He received nothing but injuries and affronts, baſe and treacherous uſage from an ungrateful world, to whom he was ſo great and ſo univerſal a benefactor. The whole buſineſs of his life was to do good, and to ſuffer evil for ſo doing. So fixed and ſteady was he in his own principle and ſaying, It is a more bleſſed thing to give, than to receive. He gave away all that he had to do us good, he parted with his glory and his life, emptied himſelf, and became of no reputation; and being rich, for our ſakes became poor, that we through his poverty might be made rich.

So that he adviſeth us to nothing, but what he did himſelf; nor impoſeth any thing upon us, from which himſelf deſired to be excuſed. And ſurely we have great reaſon to be in great love with this pattern, when that very goodneſs which he propounds to our imitation, was all laid out upon us, and redounds to our benefit and advantage; when our ſalvation and happi-

neſs are the effects of that goodneſs and compaſſion which he exerciſed in the world. He did it all purely for our ſakes: whereas all the good we do to others, is a greater good done to ourſelves.

So that here is an example and experiment of the thing in the greateſt and moſt famous inſtance that the whole world can afford. The beſt and happieſt man that ever was, the Son of God and the Saviour of men, and who is the moſt worthy to be the pattern of all mankind, went about doing good, and governed his whole life, and all the actions of it, by this principle, that it is more bleſſed to give, than to receive. Let the ſame mind be in us that was in Jeſus Chriſt; let us go and do likewiſe.

SERMON CCXIV.

The evil of corrupt communication.

EPHES. iv. 29.

Let no corrupt communication proceed out of your mouth: but that which is good to the uſe of edifying, that it may miniſter grace to the hearers.

AS diſcourſes againſt ſin and vice in general are of great uſe, ſo it is likewiſe very neceſſary to level them againſt the particular vices of men, and to endeavour, by proper and intrinſical arguments, taken from the nature of that vice we treat of, to diſſuade and deter them from it; becauſe this carries the diſcourſe home to the conſciences of men, and leaves them no way of eſcape. For this reaſon, and in compliance with their Majeſties pious proclamation for the diſcountenancing and ſuppreſſing of profaneneſs and vice, I have choſen to treat upon this ſubject, of corrupt and filthy communication, as being one of the reigning vices of this wicked and adulterous generation; of the evil whereof whereof the generality of men are leſs ſenſible than almoſt of any other, that is ſo frequently and ſo expreſſly branded in ſcripture. And to this purpoſe I have pitched upon the words which I have read unto you, as containing a plain and expreſs prohibition of this vice, Let no corrupt communication, &c.

I remember St Auſtin in one of his epiſtles tells us, that Tully, the great maſter of the art of ſpeaking, ſays of one of the great orators, Nullum unquam verbum quod revocare vellet, emiſit; "That no word ever fell "from him, that he could wiſh to have recalled." This, I doubt, is above the perfection of human eloquence, for a man always to make ſuch a choice of his words, and to place them ſo fitly, that nothing he ever ſaid could be changed for the better. But the greateſt faults of ſpeech are not thoſe which offend againſt the rules of eloquence; but of piety, and virtue, and good manners: and who can ſay that his tongue is free from all faults in this kind, and no word ever proceeded from him, which he could wiſh to have recalled? In many things, ſays St. James, chap. iii. 2. we offend all; and in this kind as much perhaps, and as often as in any. He is a good and a happy man indeed, that ſeldom or never offends with his tongue. If any man, as St James goes on, offend not in word, the ſame is a perfect man; that is, he hath attained to an eminent degree of virtue indeed, and is above the common rate of men, and may reaſonably be preſumed blameleſs in the general courſe of his life and practice; and able, as it follows, to bridle the whole body; that is, to order his whole converſation aright.

To govern the tongue is a matter of great difficulty, and conſequently of great wiſdom, and care, and circumſpection; and therefore one of the great endeavours of a wiſe and good man, ſhould be to govern his words by the rules of reaſon and religion; and we ſhould every one of us reſolve and ſay, as David does, Pſal. xxxix. 1. I will take heed to my ways, that I ſin not with my tongue. For as the virtues, ſo the vices of the tongue are many and great. In reſpect of the virtues of it, David calls it the beſt member we have; becauſe of all the members and inſtruments of the body, it is capable of giving the greateſt glory to God, and of doing the greateſt good and benefit to men. And in reſpect of the vices of it, it may be as truly ſaid to be the worſt member that we have; becauſe it is capable of doing the greateſt diſhonour to God, and the greateſt miſchief and harm among men. So that, upon all accounts, we ought to have a great care of the government of our tongue, which is capable of being ſo uſeful and ſerviceable to the beſt and worſt purpoſes, according as we reſtrain it and keep it in order, or let it looſe to ſin and folly.

And among all the vices of the tongue, as none is more common, ſo none is more miſbecoming, and more contrary to the modeſty of a man, and the gravity of a Chriſtian, than filthy and obſcene talk; of the odious nature, and the evil and miſchievous conſequences thereof, both to ourſelves and others, I deſign, by God's aſſiſtance, to treat at this time, from the words which I have read unto you, Let no corrupt communication, &c.

That by corrupt or rotten communication, is here meant filthy and obſcene talk, is generally agreed among interpreters. By that which is good to the uſe of edifying, is meant ſuch diſcourſe as is apt to build us up in knowledge and goodneſs, to make the hearers wiſer and better, That it may miniſter grace unto the hearers, that is, ſuch kind of diſcourſe as is acceptable to all; not nauſeous and offenſive to ſober and virtuous perſons, not apt to grate upon chaſte and modeſt ears, and to put the hearers out of countenance.

So that the Apoſtle doth here ſtrictly forbid all lewd and filthy diſcourſe among Chriſtians; and injoins them ſo to converſe with one another, that all their diſcourſes may miniſter mutual benefit and advantage to one another, and tend to the promoting of piety and virtue; and may likewiſe be grateful to the hearers, carefully avoiding every thing that may put them to the bluſh, or any wiſe treſpaſs upon modeſty and good manners, as all filthy communication does.

This ſort of argument, though it be frequently mentioned in ſcripture, yet it is very ſeldom treated of in the pulpit, becauſe it is a matter hard to be handled in

in a cleanly manner, and the preacher muſt always take good heed to himſelf, that his diſcourſe be free from the contagion of that vice which he reproves, and deſigns to correct and cure. And, therefore, to diſſuade and deter men from this evil practice, ſo rife and common in the world, and that not only among the profane and diſſolute ſort of perſons, but thoſe likewiſe who would ſeem to be more ſtrict and religious, I hope it may be ſufficient to all conſiderate perſons, plainly to repreſent to them the heinous nature of the thing itſelf, together with the evil and dangerous conſequences of it, both to ourſelves and to others. And this I ſhall endeavour to do in the moſt general and wary terms, keeping all along, as much as is poſſible, aloof and at a diſtance from any thing that might either offend the chaſte and modeſt, or infect lewd and diſſolute minds, which, like tinder, are always ready to take fire at the leaſt ſpark.

Having premiſed this in general, my work, at this time, ſhall be, to offer ſuch particular conſiderations, as may fully convince men of the great evil and danger of this practice; and, I hope, may effectually prevail with them to leave it, and break it off. And they ſhall be theſe following:

I. That all filthy and corrupt communication is evidently contrary to nature, which is careful to hide and ſuppreſs whatever, in the general eſteem of the ſober part of mankind, hath any thing of turpitude and uncomelineſs in it: and wherever nature hath thought fit to draw a veil, we ſhould, neither by words nor actions, expoſe ſuch things to open view. Quæ natura occultavit, ſays Tully, de offic. lib. i. eadem omnes, qui ſana ſunt mente, removent ab oculis: "Thoſe things which nature hath "thought fit to hide, all men that are in their wits en"deavour to keep out of ſight." Nos autem naturam ſequamur, ſays the ſame excellent moraliſt, ibid. & ab omni quod abhorret ab oculorum auriumque approbatione fugiamus: "Let us, ſays he, follow nature, and flee e"very thing that is offenſive either to the eyes or ears of "men." And this is ſo plain a leſſon of nature, that an actor in a play will never fall into that abſurdity, as to repreſent a grave and virtuous perſon offering any obſcene or immodeſt word: and, as the ſame author reaſons,

Hiſtrio hoc videbit in ſcena, quod non videbit ſapiens in vita? " Shall an actor ſee this to be improper upon the " ſtage, and a wiſe man not diſcern the abſurdity and in- " decency of it in his life and converſation ?"

II. All corrupt and filthy communication is a notorious abuſe of one of the greateſt and beſt gifts which God hath given us, and doth directly contradict the natural end and uſe of ſpeech. Our tongue is our glory, as the holy Pſalmiſt often calls it, who had duly conſidered the excellency and uſe of this faculty, and took great care to employ it to the purpoſes to which God gave it, and is herein an admirable pattern to us.

And, next to our reaſon and underſtanding, our ſpeech doth moſt remarkably diſtinguiſh us from the beaſts, and ſets us above them. Hoc uno præſtamus vel maxime feris, quod colloquimur inter nos, & quod exprimere dicendo ſenſa poſſumus, ſays the great Roman orator, Cicero, de orat. lib. i. " By this one thing we excel the beaſts in a " very high degree, that we can talk together, and, by " ſpeech, declare our minds to one another." By our underſtandings we know God, and by our tongues we confeſs and praiſe him: but to uſe our tongues to lewd and filthy diſcourſe, is to pervert and abuſe one of the beſt and nobleſt faculties which God hath given us: it is to affront him with his own gifts, and to fight againſt him with his own weapons. Do we thus requite the Lord? ſooliſh creatures and unthankful!

The two great ends for which this faculty of ſpeech is given us, are to glorify God our maker, and to edify man our neighbour: but all corrupt communication contradicts both theſe ends; becauſe, inſtead of praiſing God with pure hearts and lips, we do greatly diſhonour him, by polluting our tongues with lewd and filthy talk: for hereby we offer a direct affront to his holy nature and laws. This renders us altogether unfit for the worſhip and ſervice of Almighty God, who is of purer eyes than to behold iniquity and impurity of any kind. For how can we think that he will accept thoſe prayers and praiſes, which are offered to him by ſuch unpure and unhallowed lips? when we diſhonour God with the ſame mouth that we pretend to glorify him; and commit ſin with the ſame tongue that we confeſs it? How can we hope that he will accept the ſacrifice of ſuch polluted lips, out of which proceed things ſo contrary and inconſiſtent?

Thoſe who thus pervert the uſe of ſpeech, and, inſtead of glorifying him who gave them this excellent gift, and ſetting forth his praiſe, defile their tongues with filthy and impure language, give juſt occaſion to complain of them, as Elihu does of the wicked in his time, Job xxxv. 10, 11. None ſaith, Where is God my maker, who giveth ſongs in the night? Who teacheth us more than the beaſts of the earth, and maketh us wiſer than the fowls of heaven. His meaning is, that they did not glorify God their maker, by ſinging his praiſes; which, by being endowed with this noble faculty of ſpeech (which he had denied to the creatures below man, the beaſts and birds) they only were capable of performing. The conſideration of this high privilege, by which we do ſo much excel the creatures below us, ought to be a mighty obligation upon us, to employ this gift of God in the ſervice, and to the glory of the giver, and make us very careful not to offend him by it, or, by any defilement of it, to render it unfit for one of the principal uſes for which God beſtowed it upon us.

Another great end of ſpeech is to edify our neighbour. So the Apoſtle here tells us in the text, that nothing ſhould proceed out of our mouths, but what is good for the uſe of edifying, that it may miniſter grace unto the hearers. But, inſtead of that, corrupt communication offends the chaſte and virtuous, and corrupts them who have vicious inclinations, by exciting and cheriſhing lewd imaginations in them, and making them that are filthy more filthy ſtill.

III. Corrupt communication is an evidence of a corrupt and impure heart, as polluted ſtreams are a ſign that the fountain is impure from whence they came. An impure mind may be covered and diſguiſed by natural ſhame and outward reverence, in regard to the company, or from ſome other particular deſign; but when it breaks out at any time in lewd talk, our ſpeech betrays us, and diſcovers the inward thoughts of our hearts, and makes them viſible to every eye. For, as our Saviour ſaith, Out of the abundance of the heart the mouth ſpeaketh, Matth.

xii. 34, 35. How can ye, being evil, ſpeak good things? For out of the abundance of the heart the mouth ſpeaketh. A good man, out of the good treaſure of the heart, bringeth forth good things: and an evil man, out of the evil treaſure, bringeth forth evil things.

"There is not," ſays an excellent divine of our own, Dr Barrow, "a more certain ſign of a mind utterly de-"bauched from piety and virtue, than affecting ſuch talk. "A vain mind naturally venteth itſelf in frothy diſcourſe; "and luſt, boiling within, foams out in filthy talk." It is St Jude's metaphor; when he deſcribes that impure ſect of the Gnoſticks, he ſays of them, that they were continually foaming out their own ſhame, verſe 13. that is, by their lewd words and deeds, they diſcovered the inward filthineſs of their hearts. And, therefore, it is Tully's advice to him that would be perfectly virtuous, and not defective in any part of his duty, Imprimis provideat, ne ſermo vitium aliquod indicet ineſſe moribus; de offic. lib. i. "Let him, in the firſt place, ſays he, take "great care, that his ſpeech betray not ſome vice or "fault in his manners." Ἀνδρὸς χαρακτὴρ ἐν λόγῳ γνωρίζεται, "A man's character is commonly taken from his talk." Οἷος ὁ τρόπος, τοιοῦτος καὶ ὁ λόγος, ſays Ariſtides, "Such as "are the manners of a man, ſuch is his diſcourſe;" and Quinctilian, lib. xi. c. 1. Profert enim mores plerumque oratio, & animi ſecreta detegit, nec ſine cauſa Græci prodiderunt, ut vivit, quemquam etiam dicere: "Our ſpeech, "for the moſt part, declares our manners, and diſcovers "the ſecrets of our hearts; ſo that not without cauſe "was it become a proverbial ſaying among the Greeks, "that, as the man lives, ſo alſo he ſpeaks." And to the ſame purpoſe the wiſe ſon of Sirach, Ecclus xxvii. 6, 7. The fruit declareth, if the tree hath been dreſſed; ſo is the utterance of a conceit in the heart of man. Praiſe no man before thou heareſt him ſpeak: for this is the trial of men. And, verſe 13. The diſcourſe of fools is irkſome, and their ſport is in the wantonneſs of ſin.

Immodeſt ſpeech is not only an indication of an unchaſte mind; but draws likewiſe a great ſuſpicion upon a man's life. So ſtrict a connection commonly is there between a man's thoughts and words, and between his words and actions, that they are generally preſumed to be all of a piece, and agreeable to one another.

IV. Corrupt communication doth debauch and defile the minds of men, and that not only of the ſpeaker, but likewiſe of the hearer of ſuch diſcourſe; becauſe it gratifies and feeds a corrupt humour, and a vitiated appetite, beſide that it diſpoſeth and inclines to lewd and filthy actions: a ſmutty tongue and unchaſte deeds are ſeldom far aſunder, and do very often go together; for filthy talk and lewd practices ſeem only to differ in the occaſion and opportunity; and he that makes no conſcience of the one, will hardly ſtick at the other, when it can be done with ſecrecy and ſafety. The law of God forbids both alike, and his eye beholds both: For there is not a word in my tongue, ſays David, Pſal. cxxxix. 4. but thou, O Lord, knoweſt it altogether. So that, whatever may deter us from lewd practice (the authority of God forbidding it, or the awe of his preſence, who continually ſtands by us, and hears and ſees all that we ſay and do) is of equal force to reſtrain us from lewd and filthy words: for they both proceed from the ſame ill diſpoſition of mind, and are done in equal contempt of the divine preſence and authority.

V. It is uncivil and unmannerly, very diſagreeable, and highly diſpleaſing to all ſober and modeſt perſons. It is a clowniſh and rude thing, ſays Tully, de offic. lib. i. Et rerum turpitudini adhibetur verborum obſcœnitas: "If, "to things which are immodeſt in themſelves, we add "the obſcenity of words."

Nothing that treſpaſſes upon the modeſty of the company, and the decency of converſation, can become the mouth of a wiſe and virtuous perſon. This kind of converſation would fain paſs for wit among ſome ſort of perſons, to whom it is acceptable; but whatever ſavours of rudeneſs, and immodeſty, and ill manners, is very far from deſerving that name; and they that are ſober and virtuous, cannot entertain any diſcourſe of this kind with approbation and acceptance: A well-bred perſon will never offend in this way; and, therefore, it cannot but be eſteemed as an affront to modeſt company, and a rude preſuming upon their approbation, impudently taking it for granted, that all others are as lewd and diſſolute as themſelves.

This ſort of converſation was not only offenſive to righteous Lot, but was a perpetual vexation to him, and grieved him at the very heart. So St Peter tells us, 2 Peter ii. 7, 8. That Lot was vexed with the filthy converſation of the wicked. For that righteous man dwelling among them, in ſeeing and hearing, vexed his righteous ſoul from day to day with their unlawful deeds. In ſeeing and hearing; that is, in ſeeing their lewd actions, and hearing their filthy talk, his life became a burden to him; and, therefore, God ſingled him out, and delivered him, both from that wicked company, and from that dreadful judgment of fire and brimſtone, which came down from heaven upon them, and conſumed them with an utter deſtruction, for an example to all ages, and an admonition to all good men, that they ought to be in like manner affected, as righteous Lot was, with the filthy converſation of the wicked.

VI. As, by this practice, we offend againſt nature, and reaſon, and true morality; ſo it is likewiſe a direct contempt and defiance of the Chriſtian religion, which does ſo ſtrictly forbid, and ſo ſeverely condemn it in Chriſtians. Our bleſſed Saviour ſeems more particularly to cenſure and condemn this vice, when he ſays, Matth. xii. 36, 37. That every idle word that men ſhall ſpeak, they ſhall give an account thereof in the day of judgment. Every idle word, ῥῆμα ἀργὸν, every vain and unprofitable word, that nowiſe tends to edification; that is the very loweſt ſenſe the words can bear. But then, how much more ſhall we give an account in that day of every lewd word, which tends to corrupt and debauch the minds and manners of men? Some copies have it, ῥῆμα πονηρὸν, every naughty and wicked word, every falſe, and malicious, and calumniating word. "An idle word," ſays St Baſil, "is that "which is not for edification; all ſuch words ſhall come "under examination in that great aſſembly of the whole "world; and what then," ſays he, "ſhall be done to "words of ſcurrility, and calumny, and obſcenity."

But that which will beſt direct us to the meaning of this phraſe, is what the Jewiſh maſters obſerved, that, by an idle word, the Jews did commonly understand immodest and unchaste speech, scurrilous and obscene words. And then it follows, For by thy words thou shalt be justified, and by thy words thou shalt be condemned.

Men are commonly apt to make a very light matter of such words; but, because they shew the mind and manners of the man, his inward temper and disposition, therefore, men shall be called to a strict account for them in the day of judgment, and be condemned for lewd and dissolute words, as well as for acts of filthiness and uncleanness; because these come from the heart, and defile the man; they proceed from an impure spring and fountain; and though we only perceive them to come out of the mouth, yet they proceed out of the abundance of the heart, from an evil disposition of mind.

So that our judge hath expressly warned us of this fault, and declared to us the danger of it. And, therefore, whosoever believes this declaration of our Saviour, and dreads the judgment of the great day, ought to take heed that he offend not with his tongue, in this or any other kind. Men make but little account of such words now, but they shall all be strictly accounted for another day; and what we utter now so freely and without blushing, will then strike us dumb, and be matter of greatest shame and confusion to us, in the presence of God and his holy angels.

And so St Paul likewise, not only here in the text, does forbid and reprove this practice, when he says, Let no corrupt communication proceed out of your mouth; but that which is good to the use of edifying, that it may minister grace to the hearers: but in several other places of his epistles, he most severely condemns it, as utterly misbecoming Christians, and most directly contrary to our most holy profession. Eph. v. 3, 4. But fornication, and all uncleanness, or covetousness, let it not once be named among you, as becometh saints; neither filthiness, nor foolish talking, nor jesting, which are not convenient. Here he forbids all lewd and filthy talk, as utterly misbecoming the conversation of Christians, who should give no occasion to have the vices of this nature so much as once mentioned, much less practised among Christians: Let not these things, says he, be once named among you, as becometh becometh ſaints; but rather giving of thanks. Here he directs us to that which is the proper employment of the tongue, and one of the chief ends of ſpeech; which is to praiſe and glorify God, and not to diſhonour him by lewd and filthy talk. And this he urgeth again, as the proper fruit of our lips, verſe 20. Giving thanks always for all things unto God and the Father, in the name of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt.

And, then, at the 5th verſe of this chapter, he appeals to Chriſtians, whether they had not been conſtantly taught and inſtructed, that all lewdneſs and filthineſs, not only in act, but in word, will certainly ſhut men out of the kingdom of heaven. For this, ſays he, ye know, that no whoremonger, nor unclean perſon (referring to thoſe ſeveral ſorts of uncleanneſs he had mentioned before, among which is filthy and fooliſh talk) hath any inheritance in the kingdom of Chriſt, and of God. The Apoſtle here ſpeaks to the Gentile Chriſtians, who were newly converted from Heatheniſm, and had been accuſtomed to make ſlight of theſe kinds of ſin, which were ſo common among the idolatrous Heathen, and part of the worſhip of their obſcene deities: but he tells them, that the Chriſtian religion, which they had embraced, required another ſort of converſation, and did ſtrictly injoin all manner of purity, both of heart and life, in all our words and actions; and that, as he that has called us is holy, ſo we ſhould be holy in all manner of converſation. And whatever falſe teachers might inſinuate, as if the Chriſtian religion did allow a greater liberty in theſe things, and made that a cloak for licentiouſneſs, hereby turning the grace of God, that is, the doctrine of the goſpel, into laſciviouſneſs, as St Jude ſpeaks, verſe 4. yet they would certainly find things quite otherwiſe in the iſſue, and that God, who puniſhed the Heathen for theſe vices, and ſent ſuch terrible judgments upon them, would much leſs let Chriſtians go unpuniſhed, that ſhould be found guilty of them. Eph. v. 6. Let no man deceive you with vain words: for becauſe of theſe things cometh the wrath of God upon the children of diſobedience, that is, the Heathen world, who continued ſtill in their infidelity, and lived in the practice of thoſe ſins; and would fall much more heavily upon

Chriſtians,

Chriſtians, if, after they had embraced this holy religion, they ſhould allow themſelves in any of thoſe vile and impure practices, which they had been guilty of before, and which they had ſo ſolemnly promiſed to renounce and put off in their baptiſm.

And ſo likewiſe, Col. iii. 5, 6, 7. Mortify, therefore, your members which are upon the earth; fornication, uncleanneſs, inordinate affection, evil concupiſcence, and covetouſneſs, which is idolatry: for which things ſake the wrath of God cometh on the children of diſobedience, or unbelief; in the which ye alſo walked ſometime, when ye lived in them; that is, whilſt ye were Heathens, and converſed among them, ye practiſed theſe vices: but now, that is, now that ye are become Chriſtians, put off all theſe, anger, wrath, malice, evil-ſpeaking, filthy communication. Ye ſee that filthy communication is reckoned amongſt thoſe ſins of the Gentiles, which Chriſtians were utterly to quit and forſake, as contrary to the purity of the Chriſtian profeſſion. And ſo St Paul tells the Theſſalonians, 1 Theſſ. iv. 7. God hath not called us unto uncleanneſs, but unto holineſs. And he gives the ſame precept to the Coloſſians, chap. iv. 6. Let your ſpeech be always with grace, that is, acceptable and uſeful, ſomething that is worthy the hearing, ſeaſoned with ſalt, that is, with prudence and diſcretion, which ſhould always govern our ſpeech, and keep it within the bounds of ſobriety and modeſty. As our talk ſhould not be inſipid and fooliſh, ſo much leſs rotten and unſavoury, immodeſt and lewd.

And in his epiſtle to the Philippians, chap. iv. 8. he earneſtly recommends the virtues that are directly contrary to this vice. Finally, my brethren, whatſoever things are honeſt, ὅσα σεμνὰ, whatſoever things are grave or venerable, ὅσα ἁγνὰ, whatſoever things are pure or chaſte, think on theſe things; that is, have great regard to them in your converſation and behaviour, there being no ſort of virtue which the Chriſtian religion does not ſtrictly injoin and exact from us; and, conſequently, whatſoever is light or frothy, and much more whatever is lewd and filthy, ought to be baniſhed from the converſation of Chriſtians, as utterly inconſiſtent with the gravity and purity of that holy profeſſion.

And

And the ſame Apoſtle tells us, that all the promiſes of the goſpel are ſo many arguments and obligations to purity and holineſs, 2 Cor. vii. 1. Having therefore theſe promiſes, dearly beloved, let us cleanſe ourſelves from all filthineſs of the fleſh and ſpirit, perfecting, or practiſing, holineſs in the fear of God. And, on the contrary, St John tells us, that all impurity will be an effectual bar to our entrance into heaven. Rev. xxi. 27. ſpeaking of the new Jeruſalem, ſays he, There ſhall in no wiſe enter into it any thing that defileth, neither whatſoever worketh abomination. So that, if either the promiſes or threatenings of the goſpel have any influence upon us, they will effectually reſtrain this vicious practice.

VII. And laſtly, All impure and filthy communication grieves the Holy Spirit, and drives him away from us. And, therefore, after he had forbidden this vice here in the text, that no corrupt communication proceed out of your mouth, but that which is good to the uſe of edifying, that it may miniſter grace unto the hearers; he immediately adds, and grieve not the Holy Spirit of God, whereby ye are ſealed to the day of redemption; hereby intimating, that all corrupt and filthy communication grieves the Holy Spirit of God, that bleſſed Spirit which is the ſeal and earneſt of our redemption; that is, as the Apoſtle himſelf explains it, of the redemption of our bodies from the bondage of corruption, by the reſurrection of them to eternal life. For it is the Spirit of God dwelling in us, which ſhall raiſe our bodies at the laſt day, and make them partakers of a bleſſed immortality. So the Apoſtle ſays expreſly, Rom. viii. 11. But if the Spirit of him that raiſed up Jeſus from the dead, dwell in you; he that raiſed up Chriſt from the dead, ſhall alſo quicken your mortal bodies, by his Spirit that dwelleth in you. If we defile our bodies, or any members of them, by uncleanneſs, we grieve the Spirit of God which dwells in us, and force him out of his habitation; that bleſſed Spirit, which ſhould quicken our mortal bodies, and is both the earneſt and the cauſe of their reſurrection to eternal life. For our bodies, as well as our ſouls, are the temples of the Holy Ghoſt, and the Spirit of God

God dwells in them; and we baniſh him out of his temple, whenever we profane it by lewd and filthy ſpeech.

And the Apoſtle uſeth this argument more than once, to deter Chriſtians more eſpecially from the ſins of uncleanneſs. 1 Cor. iii. 16, 17. Know ye not that ye are the temple of God, and that the Spirit of God dwelleth in you? If any man defile the temple of God, him ſhall God deſtroy: for the temple of God is holy, which temple ye are. The Holy Spirit of God ſanctifieth the place where he more eſpecially reſides, and makes it his temple; and ſo are our bodies, as well as our ſouls; as the ſame Apoſtle expreſly tells us, chap. vi. verſe 18, 19, 20. where he argues againſt the ſins of uncleanneſs, which are committed in the body, and by the members and inſtruments of it, from this conſideration, that our bodies are the temples of the Holy Ghoſt. Flee fornication, ſays he. Every ſin that a man doth, is without the body: but he that committeth fornication, ſinneth againſt his own body; that is, the body is not the immediate inſtrument of other ſins, as it is of thoſe of uncleanneſs; and then it follows, What, know ye not that your body is the temple of the Holy Ghoſt which is in you, which ye have of God, and ye are not your own? For ye are bought with a price: therefore, glorify God in your body, and in your ſpirit, which are God's. Under the name of fornication the Apoſtle comprehends all the ſins of uncleanneſs, of which any member of the body is an inſtrument; ſo that the laſciviouſneſs of the eye, or ear, or tongue, is a polluting and profaning this temple of God, and drives the Holy Spirit of God out of his poſſeſſion.

And whenever the Spirit of God departs from us, we ceaſe to be the children of God, and forfeit the earneſt of our eternal inheritance. Now, if any man have not the Spirit of Chriſt, ſays the ſame Apoſtle, Rom. viii. 9. he is none of his; that is, he does not belong to him; in plain Engliſh, he is no Chriſtian. So that, as we would not forfeit the title of Chriſtians, and the bleſſed hope of a glorious reſurrection, we muſt be very careful that no corrupt communication proceed out of our mouth, leſt hereby we grieve the Holy Spirit of God, by which we are ſealed unto the day of redemption.

I have now done with this argument; and what I have ſaid concerning immodeſt and unchaſte words, is of equal force againſt laſcivious books, and pictures, and plays; all which do alike entrench upon natural modeſty, and, for that reaſon, are equally forbidden and condemned by the Chriſtian religion; and, therefore, it may ſuffice to have named them. I ſhall only ſpeak a few words concerning plays, which, as they are now ordered among us, are a mighty reproach to the age and nation.

To ſpeak againſt them in general, may be thought too ſevere, and that which the preſent age cannot ſo well brook, and would not perhaps be ſo juſt and reaſonable; becauſe it is very poſſible they might be ſo framed, and governed by ſuch rules, as not only to be innocently diverting, but inſtructing and uſeful, to put ſome vices and follies out of countenance, which cannot perhaps be ſo decently reproved, nor ſo effectually expoſed and corrected any other way. But, as the ſtage uow is, they are intolerable, and not fit to be permitted in a civilized, much leſs in a Chriſtian nation. They do moſt notoriouſly miniſter both to infidelity and vice. By the profaneneſs of them, they are apt to inſtil bad principles into the minds of men, and to leſſen the awe and reverence which all men ought to have for God and religion: and, by their lewdneſs, they teach vice, and are apt to infect the minds of men, and diſpoſe them to lewd and diſſolute practices.

And, therefore, I do not ſee how any perſon, pretending to ſobriety and virtue, and eſpecially to the pure and holy religion of our bleſſed Saviour, can, without great guilt, and open contradiction to his holy profeſſion, be preſent at ſuch lewd and immodeſt plays, much leſs frequent them, as too many do, who yet would take it very ill to be ſhut out of the communion of Chriſtians, as they would moſt certainly have been in the firſt and pureſt ages of Chriſtianity.

To conclude this whole diſcourſe: Let us always remember, that gravity and modeſty, in all our behaviour and converſation, in all our words and actions, are duties indiſpenſably required by the Chriſtian religion, and the great fences of piety and virtue; and therefore ought, with great conſcience and care, to be preſerved and kept inviolable: and when theſe fences are once broken down, there is a wide gap made for almoſt any ſin and vice to enter in. Immodeſt words do naturally tend to corrupt good manners, both in ourſelves and others.

There is none of us, but would reckon it a very great infelicity to be deprived of that noble and uſeful faculty of ſpeech, which is ſo peculiar to man, and which, next to our reaſon and underſtanding, doth moſt remarkably diſtinguiſh us from the brute beaſts: but it is a much greater unhappineſs to have this faculty, and to abuſe it to vile and lewd purpoſes. The firſt may be only our misfortune: but this can never be without great fault, and groſs neglect of ourſelves; and much better had it been for us to have been born dumb, than thus to turn our glory into ſhame and guilt, by perverting this excellent gift of God, to the corrupting ourſelves and others.

This, I hope, may be ſufficient to reſtrain men from this vice, which I have all this while been ſpeaking againſt; at leaſt to preſerve thoſe which are not yet infected, from the contagion of it; and, I hope, to reclaim many from ſo bad a practice. And if any be ſo hardened in their lewd courſe, that no counſel of this kind can make impreſſion on them, what remains, but to conclude in the words of the angel to St John, Rev. xxii. 11. He that is filthy, let him be filthy ſtill; and he that is holy, let him be holy ſtill.

SERMON CCXV.

JOHN XIV. 1.

Let not your heart be troubled: ye believe in God, believe alſo in me.

The firſt ſermon on this text.

IN which words our bleſſed Saviour does, upon a particular occaſion, preſcribe an univerſal remedy againſt trouble. And the particular occaſion of this conſolatory diſcourſe, which our Saviour here makes to his diſciples, was this. He had often told them of his ſufferings: but the conceit which they had entertained of his temporal reign, would not ſuffer them to admit any thought of ſuch a thing, as the ſufferings or death of the Meſſias; and therefore it is ſaid, that theſe things did not ſink into them, and that they underſtood them not; men being generally very ſlow to underſtand what they do not like, and have no mind to. At laſt our Saviour tells them plainly, that, how backward ſoever they were to believe it, the time of his ſufferings and death was now approaching, and that he ſhould ſhortly be betrayed into the hands of men, and be crucified and ſlain. At this his diſciples were ſtruck with great fear, and exceedingly troubled, both in contemplation of his ſufferings, and of their own invaluable loſs. To comfort them upon this occaſion, our Saviour directs his diſciples to that courſe, which was not only proper in their preſent caſe, but is an univerſal antidote and remedy againſt all trouble whatſoever, and will not only ſerve to mitigate our trouble, and ſupport our ſpirits under the fear and apprehenſion of future evils, but under preſent afflictions and ſufferings; and to quiet and comfort fort our minds under the ſaddeſt condition, and foreſt calamities that can befal us. Let not your heart be troubled: ye believe in God, believe alſo in me.

He does not only forbid them to be troubled, and counſel them againſt it; ſuch advice is eaſily given, but not ſo eaſily to be followed: but he preſcribes the proper remedy againſt trouble, which is truſt and confidence in God, the great Creator and wiſe Governor of the world; and likewiſe in himſelf, the bleſſed Son of God, and Saviour of mankind: Ye believe in God, believe alſo in me.

The words are variouſly tranſlated: by ſome indicatively, Ye do believe in God, and ye do believe in me, therefore be not troubled; by others imperatively, Believe in God, and believe likewiſe in me; and then you can have no cauſe of trouble. Or elſe the firſt clauſe may be rendered indicatively, and the latter imperatively; and ſo our tranſlation renders the words, Ye do believe in God, believe alſo in me; as you believe in God, the Creator and Governor of the world, ſo believe alſo in me the Son of God, and the Saviour of the world. But which way ſoever the words be rendered, the ſenſe comes all to one; that faith in God, and in our bleſſed Saviour, are here preſcribed as the proper and moſt powerful remedies againſt trouble: Let not your heart be troubled; ye believe in God, believe alſo in me.

In the handling of theſe words, I ſhall do theſe two things.

Firſt, I ſhall conſider what ſort of trouble is here forbidden, or with what reaſonable limitations this general prohibition of our Saviour is to be underſtood, Let not your heart be troubled.

Secondly, I ſhall endeavour to ſhew what virtue and force there is in the remedy here preſcribed by our Saviour, to mitigate and allay our trouble, and to ſupport and quiet our minds under it.

Firſt, We will conſider what ſort of trouble is here forbidden, and with what due and reaſonable limitations we are to underſtand this general prohibition of our Saviour to his diſciples, Let not your heart be troubled. And this we ſhall beſt find out by conſidering the various objects of trouble, together with the ſeveral cauſes or grounds of them. And theſe may all be ranged under theſe three heads; evils paſt, preſent, or to come. For the ground of all trouble is ſome evil, either really and in itſelf ſo, or what is apprehended by us under that notion: and the ſeveral kinds of trouble are, either the reflection upon evils paſt, or the ſenſe of an evil that is preſent, or the fear and apprehenſion of ſome future evil which threatens us and hangs over us.

I. For the firſt, The trouble cauſed by reflection upon evils paſt, this muſt either be the evil of affliction or ſin. The former of theſe, when it is paſt, is ſeldom any cauſe of trouble, the remembrance of paſt ſufferings, and the evils which we got over, being rather delightful than grievous; ſo that it is only the evil of ſin, the reflection whereof is troubleſome. And this is that which we call guilt; which is an inward vexation, and diſcontent, and grief of mind, ariſing from the conſciouſneſs that we have done amiſs, and a fearful apprehenſion of ſome vengeance and puniſhment that will follow it; and there is no trouble that is comparable to this, when the conſcience of a ſinner is thoroughly awakened.

Now upon this account our hearts ought to be troubled, and we can hardly exceed in it, provided our trouble do not drive us to deſpair, but to repentance; but there can be no ſuſpicion that this comes within the compaſs of our Saviour's prohibition.

II. As for the troubles cauſed by the ſenſe of the preſent evils, either of loſs or ſuffering, though this do properly enough fall within the compaſs of our Saviour's prohibition, Let not your heart be troubled, yet it admits of ſeveral limitations; therefore, in order to the fixing of its due and proper bounds, I ſhall briefly ſhew, what trouble for preſent evils and afflictions which are upon us, is not forbidden, and what is.

1. We are not here forbidden to have a juſt and due ſenſe of any evil or calamity that is upon us; becauſe this is natural, and we cannot help it: for there is a real difference of things in themſelves; ſome things are in their nature good and convenient for us, and agreeable and delightful to our ſenſes; and other things are in themſelves evil, that is, naturally diſpleaſing and grievous;

grievous; and we muſt not only be Stoics, but even ſtocks and ſtones, if we have not a juſt ſenſe and reſentment of this difference. Our bleſſed Saviour had ſo; and as he was afflicted more than any man, and ſuffered more than any of the ſons of men, ſo was he likewiſe very ſenſible of his ſufferings, and had a natural dread and horror of them; in ſo much that he himſelf tells us, that his ſoul was exceeding ſorrowful, even to death, upon the apprehenſion of what he was to undergo; which made him pray ſo earneſtly, and to repeat that petition ſo often, Father, if it be poſſible, let this cup paſs from me. Nay, the very anguiſh of his mind, cauſed by the dread and horror of his ſufferings, was ſo great as to force his blood through the pores of his body, ſo that he ſweat as it were thick drops of blood falling upon the ground.

And this is not to be wondered at, becauſe our bleſſed Saviour, as he had the greateſt endowments of human nature in their greateſt perfection, ſo he had a perfect ſenſe of the evils, and pains, and ſufferings of it. And all philoſophy that will not acknowledge loſs, and pain, and ſuffering, to be evils, and troubleſome and terrible, is either obſtinate ſullenneſs, or groſs hypocriſy.

2. Nor doth this prohibition of our Saviour exclude natural affection. This is a plant which God himſelf hath planted in human nature, and that for very excellent ends and purpoſes: and having made us men, and endowed us with ſuch paſſions, he does not expect that we ſhould put off our nature, and transform ourſelves into another ſort of creatures than what we were when we came out of his own hands. To be without natural affection, and to have no afflictive ſenſe of the loſs of the neareſt relations, is condemned in ſcripture, as a mark of the greateſt degeneracy and depravation of human nature. And therefore we cannot imagine that our Saviour did intend to forbid ſuch a moderate and well-regulated degree of trouble upon theſe occaſions, as is the proper and genuine iſſue of thoſe natural affections, which God himſelf hath implanted in us.

3. When our Saviour forbids us to be troubled, he doth not forbid us to have a juſt ſenſe of God's judgments, or of his hand, in procuring or permitting the evils which befal us; much leſs of our own ſins, which are the meritorious cauſe of them; nay, on the contrary, he expects that we ſhould acknowledge his providence, and the juſtneſs of it, in his ſevereſt dealings with us; that we ſhould be humbled under his mighty hand, and turn to him that ſmites us, and bear the indignation of the Lord patiently, becauſe we have ſinned againſt him. Whatever is a ſign of God's diſpleaſure againſt us, is a juſt and reaſonable cauſe of trouble to us.

But when our Saviour here forbids us to be troubled, he plainly intends to prohibit theſe three things.

1. Immoderate grief and ſorrow for any preſent affliction or loſs, without any reſtraint upon ourſelves, ſo as to let grief looſe, and to give full ſcope to it, to let the reins fall out of our hands, ſo that the conſiderations of reaſon and religion have no manner of power and command over us; to ſorrow, as Rachel did for her children, refuſing to be comforted. This is unreaſonable, and uſually of pernicious conſequence: for no man knows, when he once abandons himſelf to melancholy, and gives way to grief, and lets it pierce his heart, and enter into his ſoul, how it may overwhelm his ſpirit, and ſink it paſt recovery. And to this pitch the trouble of ſome men for worldly loſſes and diſappointments, becauſe it was not reſtrained and governed at firſt, hath brought them; and it often happens, as St Paul hath obſerved, that the trouble of the world worketh death.

I think hardly any man did ever die of grief for his ſins, and killed himſelf by laying them to heart. It is well if our ſorrow for ſin proceed to that degree, as to work real repentance and amendment. And the reaſon why our ſorrow for ſin is commonly moderate and within bounds, is becauſe the ſorrow and trouble of repentance is always reaſonable, and reaſon keeps our grief within bounds: but the ſorrow of the world, that is, of covetous and worldly-minded men, who have unreaſonably ſet their affections upon this world, hath nothing to ſet bounds and give limits to it. And therefore, by the juſt judgment of God, it ſometimes proceeds ſo far as to work death. Many mens hearts have been broken for the loſs of an eſtate, or ſome great croſs and diſ-

appointment in their worldly affairs and designs. Thus Nabal, upon the very apprehension of the danger that he and his estate were in, and had so narrowly escaped, was struck with grief to the degree of stupidity, so that his heart died within him, and he became as a stone: and in a few days he died of that grief.

2. We are not to be troubled for present afflictions and sufferings to the degree of impatience and discontent, so as to fret and murmur in our hearts against God, and to charge him foolishly, as if he dealt hardly with us, and had not a due regard for us, and an equal consideration of our case. For we are all sinners, and always deserve to suffer; and therefore whatever temporal evils befal the best men in this world, they are always less than their iniquities have deserved; and yet men are very prone to censure and find fault with God, for the evils and calamities which they draw down upon themselves. So Solomon observes, Prov. xix. 3. The foolishness of man perverteth his way; and his heart fretteth against the Lord. We suffer for our own sins and follies, and then are angry with God because we suffer. God is angry with us for our sins; and when he is angry with us, and lifts up his hand against us, it becomes us to humble ourselves under his mighty hand; for who can stand before him when once he is angry? But we have no cause to fret against him for the evils which we bring upon ourselves: besides, that fretting is not the way to relieve and ease us, but to vex and gall us the more.

3. As to the fear and apprehension of future evils, though we ought to have a just sense of them, yet we ought not to be dejected and troubled for them to the degree of despondency, so as to conclude ourselves miserable and forsaken, utterly lost and undone, and that our case is past all help and remedy: we should not be so dejected, as if we were destitute of all comfort, and utterly without hope. Hope lies at the bottom of the worst condition; for while we are not without God, we can never be without hope; so long as the government of the world is in so good hands, our case can never be desperate; and therefore we ought to rebuke the despondency of our spirits, as David did, Psal. xliii. 5. Why art thou cast down, O my soul? and why art thou disquieted quieted within me? hope in God. And we ſhould ſupport ourſelves in the greateſt dangers and fears, as he did, Pſal. iii. 1, 2, 3. Lord, how are they increaſed that trouble me? how many are they that riſe up againſt me? Many there be which ſay of my ſoul, There is no help for him in God. But thou, O Lord, art a ſhield for me, my glory, and the lifter up of my head.

And this cauſe of trouble, upon the fear and apprehenſion of future evils, was the caſe of the diſciples, who were mightily dejected and diſturbed, upon the apprehenſion of the deſtitute condition they ſhould be in upon our Saviour's departure from them; that they ſhould be expoſed to a malicious world, without all manner of protection from thoſe innumerable evils, and dangers which threatened them. And this I ſhall have moſt particular reſpect to in my following diſcourſe, as being more particularly intended by our Saviour, and being one of the moſt common cauſes of trouble in this world. I proceed therefore, in the

Second place, to conſider, what force there is in the remedy here preſcribed by our Saviour, to mitigate and allay our troubles, both in reſpect of our preſent evils and ſufferings, and the danger and apprehenſion of future evils, and to ſupport and comfort our minds under them. Let not your heart be troubled; ye believe in God, believe alſo in me.

In which words our Saviour preſcribes a double remedy againſt trouble.

Firſt, Faith in God, the great Creator and wiſe Governor of the world: Ye believe in God, or, Believe ye in God; to which he adds, in the Second place, Faith likewiſe in himſelf, the Son of God, and the Saviour of men: Ye believe in God, believe alſo in me. Not as if faith in God were not a ſufficient ground of conſolation and ſupport to our minds, but to acquaint us, that a firm faith in him who is the Son of God, and Saviour of the world, would very much tend to confirm and ſtrengthen our truſt and confidence in God; as will clearly appear, when I come to ſhew what peculiar conſiderations of comfort and ſupport the Chriſtian religion offers to us, beyond what the common light and reaſon of mankind, from the conſidera-

tion of the divine nature and perfections, does ſuggeſt to us. And to explain the full ſtrength and force of theſe two conſiderations, I ſhall do theſe two things:

Firſt, I ſhall endeavour to ſhew what conſiderations of comfort and ſupport the belief of a God, and the natural notions and acknowledgments of mankind concerning him, do afford to good men, for the allaying and mitigating of their fears and troubles. And,

Secondly, What farther conſiderations faith in Chriſt, and the firm belief of the Chriſtian religion, do afford to this purpoſe. Ye believe in God, believe alſo in me.

Firſt, To ſhew, what conſiderations of comfort and ſupport the belief of a God, and the natural notions and acknowledgments of mankind concerning him, do afford to good men, for the allaying and mitigating of their fears and troubles; which I ſhall briefly deduce thus:

The firm belief and perſuaſion of a God does neceſſarily infer the belief of his infinite power and wiſdom, and holineſs and goodneſs; for theſe are neceſſary and eſſential perfections of the divine nature, without which we cannot conceive ſuch a being as God is. Now, from theſe eſſential perfections of the divine nature, theſe two principles do naturally reſult.

I. That his providence governs the world, and adminiſters the affairs of it, particularly of mankind, with great goodneſs and wiſdom.

II. That his providence is more peculiarly concerned for good men, and that he hath a very tender and particular care of them, and regard to them.

Now, theſe two principles, concerning which I have diſcourſed at large upon another occaſion *, afford us this fourfold ground of comfort, under all the evils that we labour under, and are afraid of.

I. If God govern the world, then we and all our intereſts and concernments, are certainly in the beſt and ſafeſt hands; and where, if we knew how to wiſh well and wiſely for ourſelves, we ſhould deſire to have them; and therefore why ſhould our heart be troubled at any thing that doth or can befal us †?

* See Vol. 6. ſermon 138.

† See this matter alſo handled at large in the ſame ſermon.

II. Another

II. Another ground of comfort is, That if the providence of God, have a particular regard to good men, and favour for them, then we may be aſſured, that if we be careful of our duty to God, and rely upon his goodneſs, and refer ourſelves to his pleaſure, in the final iſſue and reſult of things, all ſhall turn to our good, and conſpire in our happineſs: nay, if we make the beſt uſe of the evils and afflictions which befal us, and bear them as we ought, we ourſelves may do a great deal to turn them to our benefit and advantage; to the bettering of our minds, and the improvement of our virtues, and the increaſe of our reward. And why ſhould we be troubled ſo much at things, which may prove ſo many ways beneficial to us, if it be not our own fault? which tend to our good, and will end in it, if we will but let patience have its perfect work, as St James ſhews, chap. v. 11. in the inſtance of Job, whoſe admirable patience had a glorious end and reward even in this world: You have heard, ſays he, of the patience of Job, and of the end God made with him; that the Lord is very pitiful and of tender mercy. Job, upon a dunghill, is no whit inferior to the moſt glorious prince that ever ſat upon a throne. Some men have been more illuſtrious, and, according to the true rate and value of things, more conſiderable for their patience, and courage, and conſtancy of mind, in great afflictions and ſufferings, than the greateſt pomp and proſperity in the world could poſſibly have made them. Some have borne poverty, and ſickneſs, and reproach, and perſecution, and exquiſite pains and torments, with ſo much decency, with ſuch greatneſs of mind and firmneſs of reſolution, as might juſtly provoke the envy of the greateſt and wealthieſt, and to all outward appearance the happieſt perſons that ever were in the world. M. Antoninus was an excellent good man, and perhaps the greateſt Emperor that ever was, for in his time the Roman empire was at its greateſt extent; and yet it is hard to ſay, whether Epictetus, whoſe example I propoſed before, and who lived about the ſame time with this great and good Emperor, I ſay, it is not eaſy to ſay, whether this poor man Epictetus, who was depreſſed into the loweſt and moſt afflicted condition, that human nature is al-

moſt capable of, were not, by reaſon of thoſe admirable virtues which ſhined ſo brightly in that dark and diſmal condition, his invincible patience, his perfect ſubmiſſion to the providence of God, the perpetual chearfulneſs and ſerenity, the unmoveable conſtancy and equality of his mind, according to a right eſtimation of things, the greater and more glorious perſon of the two.

So that good men are always ſecure, as to the main and the eſſentials of happineſs; under all outward afflictions and ſufferings of the body, they may ſtill retain a wiſe and virtuous mind, which is that good part which cannot be taken from them; and if they retain that, they are ſure of the favour of God, and the countenance of heaven, which alone is ſufficient to make any condition happy.

III. Another ground of comfort is, That if God govern the world, he can either prevent and divert the greateſt evils that threaten us, or if they come upon us, he can ſupport us under them, and deliver us out of them: and if we be good, and it be for our good, he will do one of theſe for us; either he will prevent the evil, that it ſhall not come, if that be beſt for us; or if affliction fall heavy upon us, he will ſupport us under it; and if our ſtrength be increaſed in proportion to the weight of our burden, it is as well as if we had eſcaped it, nay, perhaps, much better, conſidering the benefit and reward of it. But how grievous ſoever it be, he can, when he pleaſeth, deliver us from it; and he will do it preſently, if it be for our good; and if it be not, it is not really deſirable to us to be ſo ſoon freed from it.

IV. and laſtly, which is conſequent upon the former particulars, It is certain upon the whole matter, and upon the balancing of all accounts, that in every condition good men have much more cauſe of comfort and joy, than of dejection and trouble. Let our fears be as great, and our preſent ſufferings as heavy as they can, there are conſiderations of ſo great moment to be put into the other ſcale, as will infinitely outweigh them, and make them ſeem light. The conſideration of our immortal duration in a future ſtate, and of the endleſs and unſpeakable happineſs of another world, are of that ſolidity and weight, that these light afflictions, as the Apostle calls them, which are but for a moment, are in no wise worthy to be compared with them.

What though our passage through this world be never so stormy and tempestuous, we shall at last arrive at a safe port. Heaven is a sure sanctuary and retreat from all the evils and afflictions which we are liable to, and which many times pursue us so close in this mortal state. It is but exercising our faith and patience for a very little while, and all will be well with us; much better than if we had never been afflicted, and had been wholly exempted from all sorts of sufferings in this world. We have no pretence to the crown of life, if we do not overcome; and there can be no conquest without some conflict.

But because the Christian religion does give us the greatest, if not the only firm assurance of the happiness of another life, which, when all is done, is the great support and cordial of our fainting spirits, under the troubles and afflictions of this life, therefore I shall not now enlarge farther upon it, but refer it to the second head of my discourse, which I proposed to speak to in the next place, viz. What farther considerations of comfort and support, faith in Christ, and the firm belief of the Christian religion, do afford to good men, for the allaying and mitigating of their fears and troubles. Let not your heart be troubled; ye believe in God, believe also in me. But this I shall refer to some other opportunity.

SERMON CCXVI.

The true remedy againſt the troubles of life.

JOHN xiv. 1.

Let not your heart be troubled: ye believe in God, believe alſo in me.

The ſecond ſermon on this text.

I Have conſidered theſe words as an univerſal remedy againſt trouble: and in ſhewing what virtue and force there is in this remedy, I have conſidered, Firſt, That faith in God is a proper and moſt powerful means to mitigate and allay our trouble, and to ſupport and quiet our minds under it.

I now proceed, in the ſecond place, to ſhew what farther conſiderations of comfort and ſupport, faith in Chriſt, and the firm belief of the Chriſtian religion, do afford good men, for the allaying and mitigating of their greateſt fears and troubles. Let not your heart be troubled: ye believe in God, believe alſo in me. I ſhall mention theſe five.

I. Faith in Chriſt, or the belief of the Chriſtian religion, gives us full and perfect aſſurance of immortality, and of the glorious and eternal rewards of another world.

II. It promiſeth to every ſincere Chriſtian the inward aſſiſtance, and ſupport, and comfort of God's Holy Spirit, to bear up the weakneſs of human nature under its heavieſt preſſures of fear, or grief, or pain.

III. It aſſures us of the ſpecial efficacy of our prayers with God, either for our deliverance from trouble, or for the aids and ſupports of his grace under it.

IV. It propounds to us the beſt and moſt admirable pattern that ever was, of patience and conſtancy of mind under the apprehenſion of approaching evils, or the ſenſe of preſent ſufferings; and of a contented and chearful ſubmiſſion to the will of God in the ſaddeſt condition to which human nature is incident.

V. It aſſures us of a moſt compaſſionate, and prevalent, and perpetual patron, and advocate, and interceſſor with God for us.

I. Faith in Chriſt, or the doctrine of the Chriſtian religion, gives us full and perfect aſſurance of immortality, and of the glorious and eternal rewards of another world. Of this the world was very doubtful and uncertain before, and had but obſcure and wavering apprehenſions about it. And though the generality of mankind had naturally ſome glimmering apprehenſions of another life after this, and ſecret hopes and expectations of a future reward for good men that were hardly uſed in this world; yet the philoſophers had wrangled and diſputed the matter into ſo much uncertainty, that mankind was very much ſtaggered about it, and the doubts and difficulties that were raiſed about it did very much break the force, and weaken the influence of ſo great and weighty a conſideration.

Thus it was among the Gentiles. And under the law of Moſes, though the Jews had ſuch apprehenſions of their own immortality, and of a future ſtate of rewards and puniſhments, as natural light ſuggeſted to them; yet that covenant and diſpenſation added but very little to the clearing of theſe notions, and the ſtrengthening of this perſuaſion in the minds of men; it did rather ſuppoſe it, than add any new ſtrength and force to it: for, under that diſpenſation, the eyes of men were generally fixed upon temporal promiſes and threatenings: though, as the time of the Meſſias grew nearer, and the ſufferings of that people ſharper, they began to have clearer apprehenſions of a reſurrection to another and better life; it being natural to men, when they are deſtitute of preſent comfort, to cheriſh and make much of the future hopes of a better condition.

And therefore we find, that the people of the Jews, when they had been long exerciſed with great afflictions, began to comfort and ſupport themſelves with the hopes of a bleſſed reſurrection to a better life; as is evident from from the hiſtory of the ſeven brethren in the Maccabees, who, with great patience and courage, bore up under the moſt exquiſite torments, in confidence of being raiſed again to a bleſſed ſtate in another world. And of theſe it is that the Apoſtle certainly ſpeaks, Heb. xi. 35. when he ſays, that ſome were tortured, not accepting deliverance, that they might obtain a better reſurrection.

But the Apoſtle tells us expreſly, 2 Tim. i. 10. that the clear and certain diſcovery of a future ſtate is owing to the Chriſtian religion, and made manifeſt by the appearing of our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt; who hath aboliſhed death, and brought life and immortality to light by the goſpel. Not only natural light, but all the revelations which God had made to the world before, had this weakneſs and imperfection in them, that they did not give men the clear diſcovery and full aſſurance of another life; and, conſequently, had but little efficacy, in compariſon, to engage men to their duty, or to ſupport and comfort them under ſufferings: and therefore the Apoſtle to the Hebrews calls the goſpel, in oppoſition to the law, the power of an endleſs life, Heb. vii. 16. intimating to us, how great a force and influence the clear apprehenſions of another life are apt to have upon the minds of men. For which reaſon, the ſame apoſtle tells us, ver. 18, 19, that the law was too weak to raiſe men to the perfection of virtue and goodneſs, becauſe it did not work ſtrongly enough upon the hopes of men, by the greatneſs and clearneſs of its promiſes; and that for this weakneſs it was removed, and a more powerful and awakening diſpenſation brought in the place of it: For verily, ſays he, there is an annulling of the commandment going before, meaning the law of Moſes, which, by the goſpel, was abrogated and made void, for the weakneſs and unprofitableneſs of it; for the law made nothing perfect, but the bringing in of a better hope did. For which reaſon, chap. viii. 6. he calls the covenant of the goſpel, a better covenant, becauſe it was eſtabliſhed upon better promiſes, viz. the promiſe of an eternal inheritance, as the ſame apoſtle ſpeaks, chap. ix. 15. All the expreſs promiſes of the law were only of temporal good things, but the promiſes of the goſpel are of eternal life and happineſs: This is the promiſe which he hath promiſed us, even eternal life, ſays St John, 1 John ii. 25.

Now, the firm perſuaſion of another life does not only anſwer that great difficulty and objection againſt the providence of God, from the ſeeming injuſtice and inequality of his dealings with good and bad men in this world, becauſe the eternal rewards and puniſhments of another world will ſet all things ſtraight, and make abundant amends to good men, for all their ſufferings and afflictions here; and will render the paſt proſperity of bad men one of the greateſt aggravations of their miſery: as it is ſaid of Babylon, Rev. xviii. 7. How much ſhe hath glorified herſelf, and lived deliciouſly, ſo much torment and ſorrow give her. In like manner God will deal with wicked men in another world; their torments ſhall riſe in proportion to the pleaſure and proſperity they have enjoyed and abuſed in this world. This remarkable change of condition which ſhall befal good and bad men, in another world, is ſet forth to us in a very lively and affecting manner in the parable of the rich man and Lazarus, Luke xvi. 25. where Abraham is repreſented ſpeaking thus to the rich man, Son, remember that thou in thy life-time receivedſt thy good things, and likewiſe Lazarus evil things: but now he is comforted, and thou art tormented. He is comforted in proportion to his ſufferings in this world; and thou art tormented in proportion to the ſenſual pleaſures and luxuries of thy former life. Men, under great want and ſufferings, are apt to think their lot in this world very hard; and yet, upon the whole matter, and taking all things into conſideration, who would not much rather chuſe to be Lazarus with his hard fortune in this world, and everlaſting conſolation in the other, than the rich man drowned in pleaſure in this world, and tormented in flames in the other? I ſay, the firm belief of another life does not only anſwer this objection againſt the divine providence; but does likewiſe miniſter abundant comfort and matter of joy to good men, under all their fears and troubles in this world. Nay, this conſideration alone of a bleſſed immortality in another world, of which only the Chriſtian religion hath given us full and undoubted aſſurance, is of that

weight and moment, as to contribute more to the ſupport of our ſpirits under the evils and calamities of this life, than all the conſiderations of philoſophy put together. They are many of them pleaſant and pretty, and fit enough to entertain and divert a man's mind under a ſlight trouble; but they are too ſpeculative and refined for common capacities, too thin and weak to bear any great ſtreſs, and to ſupport and relieve a man's mind under a ſore and heavy affliction: but this is a conſideration which hath ſtrength and ſubſtance in it, that all things will end in our unſpeakable happineſs, and that this happineſs ſhall have no end. This the Apoſtle St Paul ſpeaks of as a proper conſideration of comfort, of which we are aſſured by the Chriſtian religion, that all the evils of this life ſhall, in the laſt iſſue and reſult of things, co-operate to our happineſs: Rom. viii. 28. We know, ſays he, that all things work together for good to them that love God. And 2 Cor. iv. 16, 17, 18. For which cauſe we faint not, &c. The Apoſtle gives us an account how they were afflicted and perſecuted, and what it was that ſupported them under all their ſufferings, ver. 8, 9, 10, 11: We are troubled on every ſide, yet not diſtreſſed; we are perplexed, but not in deſpair; perſecuted, but not forſaken; caſt down, but not deſtroyed; always bearing about in the body the dying of the Lord Jeſus, that the life alſo of Jeſus might be made manifeſt in our body. For we which live are always delivered unto death for Jeſus ſake. And then he tells us what it was that kept up the ſpirits of Chriſtians under theſe ſharp ſufferings, viz. the aſſurance which the Chriſtian religion gives us of a reſurrection to a better and happier life, ver. 14: Knowing that he which raiſed up the Lord Jeſus, ſhall raiſe us up alſo by Jeſus. And then it follows, ver. 16. For which cauſe we faint not: but though our outward man periſh, yet the inward man is renewed day by day; that is, though our bodies be waſted and weakened, yet every day we grow ſtronger in the reſolution of our minds, becauſe our light affliction, which is but for a moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory; while we look not at the things which are ſeen, but at the things which are not ſeen: for the things which are ſeen, are temporal;

but the things which are not ſeen, are eternal. And then, at the beginning of the next chapter, he ſtill urgeth the ſame conſideration of comfort, that ſo ſoon as we paſs out of the troubles of this life, we ſhall enter upon the happineſs of the other. For we know, that is, we Chriſtians are aſſured, that if our earthly houſe of this tabernacle were diſſolved, we have a building of God, an houſe not made with hands, eternal in the heavens. Here you ſee is the great ground of their confidence and comfort in the worſt condition, and under the moſt grievous perſecutions which they were continually expoſed to.

And therefore our Saviour and his apoſtles make no ſcruple to pronounce thoſe perſons bleſſed, who, in reſpect of their ſufferings, ſeemed to be, of all men in the world, the moſt miſerable; and they pronounce them happy, upon this very account of their ſufferings, Matth. v. 10, 11, 12. Bleſſed are they, ſays our Saviour, which are perſecuted for righteouſneſs ſake; for theirs is the kingdom of heaven. Bleſſed are ye when men ſhall revile you, and perſecute you, and ſhall ſay all manner of evil againſt you falſely for my ſake. Rejoice, and be exceeding glad; for great is your reward in heaven. Great ſufferings for God, in this world, do intitle us, by virtue of this gracious promiſe of our Lord, to a glorious reward in the other. So likewiſe St James exhorts Chriſtians to rejoice in their ſufferings, James i. 2. My brethren, account it all joy when ye fall into divers trials. And chap. v. 11: Behold, ſays he, we count them happy which endure. And St Peter, to the ſame purpoſe, 1 Pet. iv. 14. If ye be perſecuted for righteouſneſs ſake, happy are ye. So ſolid a comfort to men under all the troubles and afflictions of this world, is that firm aſſurance which the Chriſtian religion gives us of a future happineſs, as to bring even the greateſt miſeries, which in this life we are liable to, in ſome ſenſe, under the notion of bleſſedneſs.

And this was not only fine talk, like the glorious brags of the Stoics; but the primitive Chriſtians, in infinite examples, gave the real proof and evidence of it, in their conſtant and chearful behaviour under the moſt cruel and intolerable torments. Non magna loquimur, ſed vivimus, ſays Tertullian, in the name of the Chriſtians: "We do " not talk great things, but do them; and demonſtrate " the real effect of our words and profeſſion in our lives " and actions." Never did the arguments fetched from another world, and the aſſurance of a bleſſed immortality, diſplay their force and virtue more, than in the joyful ſufferings of the firſt Chriſtians, and their generous contempt of all that was dear to them in this world, in hope of that eternal life, which God, that cannot lie, hath promiſed: and which the Son of God had enſured to them, by his reſurrection from the dead.

II. The Chriſtian religion promiſeth to every ſincere Chriſtian, the inward aſſiſtance, and ſupport, and comfort of God's Holy Spirit, to bear up the weakneſs of human nature under its heavieſt preſſures of fear or ſufferings. And this is peculiar to the Chriſtian religion: for though the providence of God did take particular care of good men in all ages, and he did always, in ſome good meaſure, aſſiſt them to do their duty, and afford comfort and ſupport to them under great trials and ſufferings; yet God never made ſo expreſs and general a promiſe of this to all good men, as he hath done by the Chriſtian religion. Never was ſo conſtant a preſence and influence of the divine Spirit vouchſafed and aſſured to men under any diſpenſation, as that of the goſpel, wherein the Spirit of God is promiſed to all that ſincerely embrace the Chriſtian religion, to reſide and dwell in them, not only to all the purpoſes of ſanctification and holineſs, but of ſupport and comfort under all troubles and ſufferings; for which reaſon the goſpel is called the miniſtration of the Spirit; and is, upon this account, ſaid to be more glorious than any other revelation which God had ever made to mankind. And therefore this is ſaid to be eſſential to every Chriſtian, to have the Spirit of God dwell in him. Rom. viii. 9, 10. ſpeaking of all true Chriſtians. Ye are, ſaith St Paul, not in the fleſh, but in the ſpirit, if ſo be that the Spirit of God dwell in you. Now, if any man have not the Spirit of Chriſt, he is none of his. So that every ſincere Chriſtian is made partaker of the promiſe of the Spirit through faith; that is, by his belief of the Chriſtian religion, he is under the immediate conduct and influence of God's Holy Spirit, and hath this bleſſed Guide and Comforter always present with him, nay, continually dwelling and residing in him, if we do not grieve and quench, and drive him away from us, by our ill treatment of him, and resistance of his blessed motions.

And this promise of the Spirit our Saviour had a very particular respect to, when he prescribes faith in himself as a special remedy against that trouble which possessed their minds, upon the apprehension of his departure from them; and therefore he tells them so often, that when he was gone from them, he would send them another Comforter or Advocate, who should undertake their cause, and would stand by them in their greatest troubles and temptations. He tells them, that he himself would be an Advocate for them in heaven: but because that was at a great distance, and might not be so sensible a comfort to them, he promiseth to send them another Advocate, that should be present with them here on earth, and upon all occasions undertake their patronage and defence. So that, all things considered, he assures them there was so little reason to be troubled at his departure from them, that they had cause rather to be glad of it, because it would turn to their great advantage; and instead of the benefit of his outward teaching and presence, they should have the inward presence and teaching of his Spirit, and the continual aids and supports of his grace. I go my way, says he, John xvi. 5, 6, 7. I go my way to him that sent me, and none of you asketh me, Whither goest thou? but because I have said these things unto you, sorrow hath filled your heart. Nevertheless, I tell you the truth; it is expedient for you that I go away: for if I go not away, the Comforter will not come unto you; but if I depart, I will send him unto you. And so the evangelist tells us before, chap. vii. 39. that the Spirit was not to be given, till Jesus was first glorified. This, says he, spake he of the Spirit, which they that believed on him should receive: for the Holy Ghost was not yet given, because Jesus was not yet glorified; plainly declaring, that, according to the wise dispensation of God, it was so ordered, that the sending of the Holy Ghost for the propagating of the gospel, by those miraculous powers which were to be conferred upon the first publishers of it, and for the supporting and comforting of Christians under the sharp trials and sufferings to which they were to be exposed, was the fruit of Christ's ascension into heaven, and his sitting at the right hand of the Majesty on high, and the first boon which he should obtain of his Father, by the virtue and power of his intercession. I will pray the Father, says he, ver. 16. of this chapter, and he shall send you another Advocate, the Spirit of truth, and he shall abide with you for ever. He shall send you another Comforter; so our translation renders the word παράκλητος, but it most properly signifies an advocate or patron, that undertakes our defence, and pleads our cause for us. And this the Holy Ghost, in a most eminent and remarkable manner, was to the apostles and first Christians, when they were called to answer for themselves before kings and governors. They were generally men of low condition and mean breeding, easily dashed out of countenance before great men; and therefore our Saviour promised that the Holy Ghost should be their Advocate, and should prompt and assist them in the pleading of their cause. Matth. x. 18, 19, 20. Ye shall be brought before governors and kings for my sake. But when they deliver you up, take no thought how or what ye shall speak; for it shall be given you in that same hour what ye shall speak; for it is not you that speak, but the Spirit of your Father, which speaketh in you. Or, as it is in St Luke, chap. xii. ver. 12. The Holy Ghost shall teach you in the same hour what ye ought to say. And yet more fully, chap. xxi. ver 12, 14, 15; where, speaking again of their being brought before kings and rulers for his name's sake, he gives them this charge: Settle it therefore in your hearts, not to meditate before what ye shall answer; for I will give you a mouth and wisdom, which all your adversaries shall not be able to gainsay, nor resist.

And this promise we find remarkably made good to St Stephen, Acts vi. 10. of whom it is there said, that his enemies were not able to resist the wisdom and the spirit by which he spake. And to St Paul likewise, when he was first called to answer for himself at Rome, as he himself tells Timothy, 2 Tim. iv. 16, 17. At my first answer no man ſtood with me; but all men forſook me: notwithſtanding the Lord ſtood with me, and ſtrengthened me.

And though this was extraordinary, yet all Chriſtians have, by virtue of this promiſe, the ordinary aſſiſtance and comfort of God's Holy Spirit in all their troubles and afflictions. By this Spirit we may, in all our diſtreſſes, with confidence, make our addreſſes to God, having acceſs by one Spirit to the Father, as St Paul ſpeaks, Eph. ii. 18. By the ſame Spirit we are aſſiſted in our prayers, and directed many times what to aſk of God, ſuitable to the condition which his providence deſigns to bring us into; which ſeems to be the apoſtle's meaning, Rom. viii. 26. Likewiſe the Spirit alſo helpeth our infirmities: for we know not what to pray for as we ought; but the Spirit itſelf maketh interceſſion for us; that is, ſuggeſts to us ſuch requeſts as are fit for us to put up to God. By the ſame Spirit is ſecretly infuſed into our ſouls, peace and joy in believing, great conſolation and good hope through grace. Hence are thoſe expreſſions in ſcripture, of the conſolation of the Spirit, and of joy in the Holy Ghoſt; the beſt cordial in the world in all caſes of trouble.

And, in extraordinary caſes, good men, by virtue of this promiſe of the Spirit, may expect to be borne up and comforted in a very extraordinary and ſupernatural manner, under the greateſt tribulations and ſufferings for righteouſneſs ſake. This was very ſignal and remarkable in the primitive Chriſtians, who were expoſed to the moſt fierce and cruel perſecutions; and may ſtill be expected in like caſes of extraordinary ſuffering for the teſtimony of God's truth. If ye be reproached, ſaith St Peter, 1 Pet. iv. 14. for the name of Chriſt, happy are ye; for the Spirit of glory and of God reſteth upon you. The Spirit of God is there promiſed, to ſtrengthen and ſupport all that ſuffer for the name of Chriſt, in a very conſpicuous and glorious manner; according to that prayer of St Paul, Col. i. 11. that Chriſtians might be ſtrengthened with all might, according to God's glorious power, unto all long-ſuffering with joyfulneſs. For when God exerciſeth good men with trials more than human, and ſufferings which are beyond the ordinary rate of human ſtrength and patience to bear, he hath engaged himſelf to aſſiſt and endow them with more than human courage and resolution. So St Paul tells the Corinthians, who had not yet felt the utmost rage of persecution, 1 Cor. x. 13. No temptation, or trial, hath yet befallen you, but what is common to men; nothing but what is frequently incident to human nature, and what, by an ordinary assistance of God's grace, men may grapple with; but in case God calls men to extraordinary sufferings, He is faithful that hath promised, who will not suffer you to be tempted above what ye are able; but will, with the temptation, also make a way to escape, that ye may be able to bear it. And why should we be daunted at the weight of an affliction, if we be well assured that our strength shall be increased in proportion to our burden?

And wherever this promise is not made good, there is some defect on our part; either men are not sincere in the profession of the truth, and then no wonder if they fall for fear of suffering; or they have been too confident of themselves, and have not, with that earnestness and importunity they ought, prayed to God for his grace and assistance, and thereupon God hath justly left them to try their strength against a violent and powerful temptation: as he did Peter, who, for all his confidence, did, upon no very great temptation, deny his Saviour; but even in this case, where there is truth and sincerity at the bottom, God gives to such persons, as he did to Peter, the opportunity of recovering themselves by repentance.

There are three particulars more remain, but I shall proceed no farther at this time.

SER-

SERMON CCXVII.

The true remedy againſt the troubles of life.

JOHN xiv. 1.

Let not your heart be troubled: ye believe in God, believe alſo in me.

The third ſermon on this text.

FRom theſe words I propoſed to ſhew, what force and virtue there is in the remedy propoſed by our Saviour, to mitigate and allay our troubles; and I told you that our Saviour here preſcribes a double remedy.

Firſt, Faith in God, the great Creator and Governor of the world.

Secondly, Faith in himſelf, the Son of God and Saviour of men. I have ſpoken to the firſt, and have likewiſe entered upon the Second; And here I propounded to ſhew, what farther conſiderations of comfort and ſupport, faith in Chriſt, and the firm belief of the Chriſtian religion, do afford to good men, for the allaying and mitigating of their greateſt fears and troubles. And I mentioned five.

I. Faith in Chriſt gives us full aſſurance of immortality, and the rewards of another world.

II. It promiſeth to every ſincere Chriſtian, the inward aſſiſtance and ſupport of God's Holy Spirit. Thus far I have gone. I now proceed.

III. It aſſures us of the ſpecial efficacy of our prayers with God, either for our deliverance from trouble, or for the aids and ſupports of his grace under it.

Now, concerning the great efficacy of our prayers with God, there are ſeveral very particular and remarkable promiſes and declarations in the New Teſta-

ment, Matth. vii. 7. Ask, and it shall be given you: seek, and ye shall find: knock, and it shall be opened unto you. Matth. xxi. 22. And all things whatsoever ye shall ask in prayer, believing, ye shall receive. John xv. 7. If ye abide in me, and my words abide in you, ye shall ask what ye will, and it shall be done unto you. But then he directs us to put up our petitions to God in his name, as the way to make them prevalent. John xiv. 13, 14. And whatsoever ye shall ask in my name, that will I do, that the Father may be glorified in the Son. If ye shall ask any thing in my name, I will do it. And chap. xvi. 23, 24. he repeats this promise again, for their support and comfort under the tribulations which they should endure. And in that day ye shall ask me nothing. Verily, verily, I say unto you, Whatsoever ye shall ask the Father in my name, he will give it you. Hitherto ye have asked nothing in my name: ask, and ye shall receive, that your joy may be full. And again, verse 26, 27. At that day ye shall ask in my name: and I say not unto you, that I will pray the Father for you; for the Father himself loveth you. He assures them of God's merciful inclination towards them; and if it would add any thing to their comfortable assurance of having their prayers heard, he could have told them, That he would pray the Father for them. St James particularly comforts the Christians under their trials upon this consideration, that God is ready to give wisdom and strength to demean ourselves as we ought under sufferings, if we heartily beg it of him, James i. 2, 3, 4, 5. My brethren, count it all joy when ye fall into divers temptations, knowing this, that the trying of your faith worketh patience: but let patience have her perfect work, that ye may be perfect and entire, wanting nothing. And since this requires great wisdom, to bear great afflictions with patience, therefore he adds, that God is always ready to grant this wisdom and grace to those that heartily beg it of him. If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not; and it shall be given him. 1 John iii. 22. And whatsoever we ask, we receive of him, because we keep his commandments, and do those things that are pleasing in his sight. And, chap. v. 14, 15. And this is the confidence that we have in him, that is, we Chriſtians: for he had ſaid before, Theſe things have I written unto you, that believe on the name of the Son of God; and then it follows, And this is the confidence that we have in him, that, if we aſk any thing according to his will, he heareth us. And if we know that he heareth us, whatſoever we aſk, we know that we have the petitions that we deſired of him; that is, though we have not preſently the thing we prayed for, yet we are as ſure of it as if we had it. The earneſt prayer of every ſincere Chriſtian is very powerful and available with God. So St James aſſures us, chap. v. 16. The effectual fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much; much more the united prayers of the faithful. So our Saviour declares, Matth. xviii. 19. Again, I ſay unto you, That if two of you ſhall agree on earth, as touching any thing that they ſhall aſk, it ſhall be done for them of my Father which is in heaven.

All theſe promiſes and declarations do certainly ſignify a more ſpecial efficacy and prevalency of the prayers of Chriſtians. And though there was a miraculous power of prayer in the primitive times, which is now ceaſed, and of which St James plainly ſpeaks, chap. v. 14, 15. Is any ſick among you? let him call for the elders of the church, and let them pray over him, anointing him with oil in the name of the Lord: and the prayer of faith ſhall ſave the ſick, and the Lord ſhall raiſe him up: Yet it is certain that theſe promiſes extend farther, to the efficacy of the prayers of the faithful in ſuch caſes. And ſo our Saviour extends this promiſe, Matth. xxi. 22. for, after he had ſaid in the verſe before, Verily I ſay unto you, If ye have faith, and doubt not, ye ſhall not only do this which is done to the fig-tree; but alſo, if ye ſhall ſay unto this mountain, Be thou removed, and be thou caſt into the ſea, it ſhall be done. After this, he immediately ſubjoins, And all things whatſoever ye aſk in prayer, believing, ye ſhall receive; hereby declaring, that the efficacy of the prayers of Chriſtians was not limited only to thoſe miraculous effects, which were but to continue for a time, but that this promiſe was to be extended to the prayers of the faithful in all caſes, and all times.

And,

And, indeed, all the grounds and reaſons of the efficacy and prevalency of our prayers, which are mentioned in the New Teſtament, do equally concern Chriſtians in all times; as that we pray to God in the name and mediation of Jeſus Chriſt, upon which our Saviour very frequently, when he makes this promiſe, lays great ſtreſs, and ſeems to render it as the reaſon of the ſpecial efficacy of our prayers. John xiv. 13, 14. And whatſoever ye ſhall aſk in my name, that will I do, that the Father may be glorified in the Son. If ye ſhall aſk any thing in my name, I will do it. And, chap. xvi. 23, 24. Verily, verily, I ſay unto you, Whatſoever ye ſhall aſk the Father in my name, he will give it you. Hitherto ye have aſked nothing in my name: aſk, and ye ſhall receive.

Another reaſon of the acceptance and prevalency of our prayers, is, that the Spirit of God, which dwells in all true Chriſtians, does help our weakneſs, and ſecretly directs us to aſk of God thoſe things which are according to his will, and does, as it were, intercede for us. Rom. viii. 26. Likewiſe the Spirit alſo helpeth our infirmities. For we know not what we ſhould pray for as we ought: but the Spirit itſelf maketh interceſſion for us. And, verſe 27. And he that ſearcheth the hearts, knoweth what is the mind of the Spirit, becauſe he maketh interceſſion for the ſaints, according to the will of God. And no wonder if thoſe petitions are very prevalent, which we are aſſiſted and directed to put up to God, according to his will.

And this certainly is a great comfort under any trouble, that we can have free acceſs to God by prayer, in confidence that he will grant us thoſe requeſts which we put up to him according to his will. And this the Apoſtle to the Hebrews mentions more than once, as an argument to them to continue ſtedfaſt in the profeſſion of their religion, notwithſtanding the perſecution that attended it, becauſe we may, at all times, addreſs ourſelves to God, in confidence of his gracious help and aſſiſtance, Heb. iv. 16. after he had exhorted them to hold faſt their profeſſion, as an encouragement thereto, he adds the free acceſs we may have to God for his help and ſupport: Let us therefore, ſays he, come boldly, or with great freedom and confidence, to the throne of grace, that we may obtain mercy, and find favour with him for our ſeaſonable help and ſuccour. And to the ſame purpoſe, chap. x. 19, 20. Having therefore, brethren, freedom to enter into the holieſt by the blood of Jeſus; that is, having acceſs to God in prayer by Jeſus Chriſt, let us draw near with a true heart, in full aſſurance of faith; that is, in perfect confidence that our prayers will be graciouſly heard and anſwered: upon which he adds, Let us hold faſt the profeſſion of our faith without wavering, for he is faithful that hath promiſed: if we continue ſtedfaſt to God, and the profeſſion of his truth, he will make good all that he hath promiſed, both of preſent ſupport under our ſufferings, and of the glorious reward of them in another life: he will hear our prayers, and grant us the aids and ſupplies of his grace as we ſtand in need of them.

IV. The Chriſtian religion propounds to us the beſt and moſt admirable pattern that ever was of patience and conſtancy of mind, under the apprehenſion of approaching evils, or the ſenſe of our preſent ſufferings, and of a contented and chearful ſubmiſſion to the will of God, in the ſaddeſt condition to which human nature is incident; and that is the pattern of our bleſſed Saviour, who, for this reaſon, among others, was ſo great a ſufferer in ſo many kinds, that he might go before us in this rough and difficult way, and leave us an example, that we ſhould follow his ſteps, that we might learn from him how to calm and quiet our ſpirits, to appeaſe and huſh the tumults of our paſſions, under the ſevereſt diſpenſations of God's providence towards us, and to bend our wills to a patient ſubmiſſion to the will of our heavenly Father, under the ſoreſt afflictions, and ſharpeſt ſufferings. For, though our bleſſed Saviour prayed ſo earneſtly to his Father, that that bitter cup might paſs from him, yet how quietly and chearfully did he reſign and yield up himſelf to the will of God, ſaying, Yet not my will, but thine be done! Human nature ſhrunk and gave back at the ſight of his dreadful ſufferings: but his reaſon over-ruled the inclinations of nature, and kept him to a ſteady reſolution of ſubmitting to the will of God. And, therefore, when Peter attempted his reſcue, he commanded him to deſiſt, ſaying, Put thy ſword into the ſheath: the cup which my Father hath given me, ſhall I not drink it? John xviii. 11. And though he had as quick a ſenſe of ſuffering as any man, yet with what patience did he poſſeſs his ſoul! with what meekneſs and humility of ſpirit did he bear and yield to it! He was led as a lamb to the ſlaughter, and as a ſheep before the ſhearers is dumb, ſo he opened not his mouth. When he was reviled, he reviled not again; when he ſuffered, he threatened not; but committed himſelf to him that judgeth righteouſly. And thus it became the Captain of our ſalvation, that he might be a perfect pattern to us of patience and ſubmiſſion to the will of God, of a meek and undiſturbed mind, under the greateſt bodily pains, and the extreme anguiſh of his ſoul, to be made perfect by ſufferings.

So that, under the greateſt preſent evils, or the moſt fearful apprehenſion of future evil and ſuffering, we ſhould fix our eyes ſtedfaſtly upon this great and glorious example of patience, and conſtancy, and meekneſs; of a due ſenſe, and yet of a moſt decent behaviour under the heavieſt load of affliction, that was ever laid upon any of the ſons of men; looking, as the Apoſtle exhorts, Heb. xii. 2, 3. Looking unto Jeſus, the author and finiſher of our faith; who, for the joy that was ſet before him, endured the croſs, and deſpiſed the ſhame; and conſidering him, who endured ſuch contradiction of ſinners againſt himſelf, leſt we be weary and faint in our minds.

And, ſurely, if we would but let our minds dwell a while upon this conſideration of the ſufferings of the Son of God, and his great meekneſs, and patience, and ſubmiſſion to the will of God under them, it would mightily conduce to the mitigating of our trouble, and bringing us to poſſeſs our ſouls in patience, in the ſaddeſt condition that can befal us.

And what conſideration more proper for us than this, when we are going to receive the bleſſed ſacrament, wherein the ſufferings of the Son of God are repreſented to us, in the ſymbols of his body broken, and his blood ſhed for the remiſſion of our ſins? and there are many conſiderations which this ſight is apt to ſuggeſt to us, which are ſo many powerful arguments to quiet and comfort our minds, under the greateſt troubles and ſufferings which we are liable to; ſuch as theſe:

1. The grievous ſufferings which the Son of God was expoſed to, do clearly ſhew us, that the good things of this life are not ſo valuable, nor the evils and ſufferings of it ſo conſiderable, as we are apt to fancy and imagine; when the beſt man that ever lived was ſo deſtitute even of the common comforts and conveniencies of human life, and had ſo large a ſhare of the calamities and ſufferings of it. If we could but rectify our opinion of things, it would go a great way in making any of the evils and afflictions of this life tolerable. If God ſee good to reduce us to poverty and want, let us think of him, who, being Lord of all, had not where to lay his head; who, being rich, for our ſakes became poor, that we, through his poverty, might be made rich. To be deſtitute of worldly accommodations cannot ſeem ſo diſmal and deſpicable a ſight, when we conſider whoſe lot it was to live in a low and indigent condition; the very conſideration whereof doth not only make poverty tolerable, but even glorious.

So, likewiſe, when we are perſecuted for righteouſneſs ſake, and exerciſed with ſufferings and reproaches; when we are ready to be diſcouraged in well-doing, by the oppoſition we meet withal from the ingratitude of men, and the malicious interpretation of our good actions, perverting the beſt things, done with the beſt mind, and to the beſt end, to ſome ill purpoſe and deſign: let us look to Jeſus, and conſider him who endured ſuch contradiction of ſinners againſt himſelf, and this will help to abate the hideous apprehenſion of theſe things.

2. The ſufferings of the Son of God are a demonſtration to us, that the love and favour of God, wherein the chief happineſs of man conſiſts, are not to be eſtimated and meaſured by outward proſperity in this world; much leſs can it be concluded from temporal afflictions and ſufferings, that God hath no favour and kindneſs for thoſe whom he thiuks fit to exerciſe with them. For we ſee plainly, by this inſtance of the grievous ſufferings of his Son, that God may moſt deeply wound and afflict thoſe whom he moſt dearly loves; and if we can be ſecure of the favour of God, and his loving-kindneſs, why ſhould

our hearts be troubled and dismayed at the apprehension of any evil that can befal us?

God may love his children, and yet chasten them very severely: nay, that he does so, is rather an argument that they are his children, and that he loves them, and is concerned for them. So I am sure the Apostle teacheth us to argue, Heb. xii. 6, 7, 8. For whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth, and scourgeth every son whom he receiveth. If ye endure chastening, God dealeth with you as with sons: for what son is he whom the father chasteneth not? But if ye be without chastisement, whereof all are partakers, then are ye bastards, and not sons. The heaviest and most grievous load of sufferings that ever was laid on any man, God permitted to be laid on his only begotten Son, the dearly beloved of his soul, in whom he was well pleased. The greater our afflictions are, and the more we suffer for righteousness sake, so much the liker are we to the Son of God, and so much the more likely to be the sons and children of God. It is true, as the Apostle tells us, that no affliction for the present is joyous, but grievous: but surely it is a great mitigation of it, to consider what a glorious example and argument of patience our religion proposeth to us, for our encouragement under sufferings: that the best man that ever was, lived in the most afflicted condition; and the greatest sufferer that ever was, or can be, was the dearly beloved Son of God.

3. In the victorious sufferings of the Son of God, we see the world conquered to our hand, all the terrors and temptations of it disarmed, and all its force baffled and broken. This consideration our Saviour makes use of to support the faint spirits of his disciples, under the melancholy apprehensions which they had of sufferings, John xvi. 33. In the world ye shall have tribulation: but be of good cheer, I have overcome the world. The great work is done to our hands; affliction and death are vanquished and overcome by him. That conquest which the Captain of our salvation hath already made of all the powers of darkness, renders our victory over them cheap and easy.

4. The temptations and sufferings of our Lord were greater than ours are or can be; for he bore the heavy and inſupportable load of all the ſins of all mankind, and of the wrath and vengeance due to them. The Lord hath laid on him, ſaith the Prophet, Iſaiah liii. 6, 7. The Lord hath laid on him the iniquity of us all; he was oppreſſed and afflicted. And well might he be oppreſſed with affliction, who had ſuch an intolerable burden as the ſins of all mankind to preſs him down. That paſſage is commonly applied to him, and well might he cry out in that manner, Is it nothing to you, all ye that paſs by? Behold and ſee if there be any ſorrow like unto my ſorrow, wherewith the Lord hath afflicted me in the day of his fierce anger. Such were the ſufferings of our Lord, ſo great and ſo grievous, as none of us are in any degree able to undergo. That weight under which he crouched, would cruſh us; that which he was hardly able to ſuſtain, would certainly ſink us; and do we complain and faint in our minds, when but a very little part of the puniſhment due to us only for our ſins is inflicted upon us? The conſideration of the heavy and unknown ſufferings of the Son of God ſhould make all our afflictions not only tolerable, but light.

5. And yet we have in effect the ſame ſupport that he had. We are apt to be very much diſheartened and diſcouraged at the apprehenſion of ſufferings, from the conſideration of our own weakneſs and frailty; but the Spirit of Chriſt dwells in us, and the ſame glorious power that raiſed up Jeſus from the dead, works mightily in them that believe. St Paul uſeth very high expreſſions in this matter, Eph. i. 19, 20. That ye may know, ſays he, ſpeaking in general of all Chriſtians, what is the exceeding greatneſs of his power to us-ward who believe, according to the working of his mighty power, which he wrought in Chriſt, when he raiſed him from the dead, and ſet him on his own right hand. So that every ſincere Chriſtian is endowed with a kind of omnipotency, being able, as St Paul ſays of himſelf, to do all things through Chriſt ſtrengthening him. We are of ourſelves very weak, and the temptations and terrors of the world are very powerful; but there is a principle reſiding in every true Chriſtian, that is able to bear us up againſt the world, and the power of all its temptations. Whatſoever is born of God, ſays St John, overcometh the world: for greater is he

that is in you, than he that is in the world. The Holy Spirit of God, which dwells in all true Chriſtians, is a more powerful principle of reſolution, and courage, and patience, under the ſharpeſt trials and ſufferings, than that evil ſpirit which rules in the world is to ſtir up and ſet on the malice and rage of the world againſt us. Ye are of God, and have overcome the world; becauſe greater is he that is in you, than he that is in the world.

6. Let us conſider farther, for whom, and for what, our bleſſed Lord ſuffered. Not for himſelf; but for our ſake: not for any fault of his own; for he had no ſin; but for our ſins. He was perfectly innocent: but we are great and grievous offenders. We ſuffer upon our own account: but he only for our ſakes, and for our ſalvation. So that the example of our Lord's ſufferings hath an irreſiſtible force and virtue in it, to argue us into patience and ſubmiſſion. Did he bear the load of our ſins ſo willingly? Did he, who had no ſin, ſuffer ſo patiently, to free us from eternal ſufferings? and ſhall we, who are guilty, think much to bear a ſmall part of that burden, which he ſo chearfully underwent for us, and which falls ſo much ſhort of the due puniſhment of our faults? The penitent thief upon the croſs urged the equity and force of this argument to patience, to his fellow-criminal, that they who had been guilty of ſuch great crimes, and were juſtly condemned for them, ought to be patient under their ſufferings. We, indeed, ſays he, are juſtly condemned; for we receive the due reward of our deeds: but this man hath done nothing amiſs.

7. and laſtly, If we conſider the tranſcendent excellency and dignity of the perſon who underwent ſo great ſufferings, with ſo much meekneſs and patience, and with ſo even and undiſturbed a mind, this will calm and allay our paſſions, and mitigate the troubles which befal us pitiful and inconſiderable creatures, in compariſon of this Prince of glory, and Heir of everlaſting bliſs. When we conſider the meekneſs of this excellent perſon, the eternal Son of God, and with what ſubmiſſion and ſerenity of mind he demeaned himſelf, under ſo great and continual provocations from his own creatures and beneficiaries, thoſe whom he had made, and whom he came to

ſave; ſhall we think much to bear the indignities and affronts of our fellow-creatures? When we behold how contented this great perſon was in the meaneſt condition, how he welcomed all events, and was ſo perfectly reſigned to the will of his heavenly Father, that whatever pleaſed God, pleaſed him; ſhall we murmur at any condition which the providence of God allots to us, and repine at any event whatſoever?

Shall we reſent injuries, and affronts, and calumnies ſo heinouſly, as to be out of all temper and patience, when we conſider with what meekneſs of temper, and how little emotion of mind, the Son of God bore all theſe; how he gave his back to the ſmiters, and his cheeks to them that plucked off the hair, and with-held not his face from ſhame and ſpitting; how he was led as a lamb to the ſlaughter, and as a ſheep before the ſhearers is dumb, ſo he opened not his mouth; being reviled, he reviled not again; when he ſuffered, he threatened not!

To conclude, can we entertain thoughts of revenge towards the inſtruments of our ſufferings, when we have ſuch a pattern of forgiving before us, who poured out his blood for the expiation of the guilt of them that ſhed it, and ſpent his laſt breath in a moſt fervent and charitable prayer for his betrayers and murderers?

Thus we ſhould propoſe to ourſelves the pattern of our Lord's ſpirit and demeanour under ſufferings, in whom meekneſs and ſubmiſſion, and patience had their perfect work; that the ſame mind may be in us, that was in Chriſt Jeſus, and that, as we have him for an example, we may follow his ſteps.

The laſt conſideration of comfort and ſupport under trouble, which the Chriſtian religion gives us, remains yet to be ſpoken to, namely, that we are aſſured of a moſt compaſſionate, and prevalent, and perpetual patron, and advocate, and interceſſor with God for us.

But this, together with the application of this whole diſcourſe, I ſhall refer to the next opportunity.

SERMON CCXVIII.

The true remedy againſt the troubles of life.

JOHN xiv. 1.

Let not your heart be troubled: ye believe in God, believe alſo in me.

The fourth ſermon on this text.

I Come now to the fifth and laſt ground of comfort, which the Chriſtian religion affords to good men, for their ſupport under trouble, namely, that it aſſures us of a moſt compaſſionate, and prevalent, and perpetual Patron, and Advocate, and Interceſſor with God in heaven for us, namely, our bleſſed Saviour, who, for the ſuffering of death, was crowned with glory and honour, advanced at the right hand of God, where he ſits in great majeſty and glory, having all power in heaven and earth committed to him, and where he lives continually to make interceſſion for us.

And this is another conſideration mentioned by our Saviour, for the comfort of his diſciples, who were ſo ſorrowful at the thoughts of his departure from them, that, though he ſhould leave the world, yet he ſhould be highly advanced in heaven, where he would certainly employ all his favour, and power, and intereſt, for their benefit and advantage, and be an everlaſting Patron and Advocate for thoſe whoſe ſalvation he had purchaſed with ſo much ſweat and blood, preſenting our requeſts and prayers to God, in virtue of his moſt meritorious ſacrifice and ſufferings continually preſented to his Father, perpetually ſoliciting our cauſe, and procuring for us all thoſe bleſſings, by his interceſſion in heaven, which he had purchaſed for us, by his his blood upon earth. For which reaſon, ſaith the Apoſtle, Heb. vii. 25. He is able to ſave to the uttermoſt all thoſe that come to God by him, ſeeing he ever liveth to make interceſſion for us; that is, he is able to perfect the work of our ſalvation, which he began here upon earth; and to procure, for all thoſe who addreſs their prayers to God in his name, whatever is needful and convenient for us, becauſe he is always at the right hand of God, to ſecond our prayers by his powerful interceſſion for us.

And this is a ground of comfort, though not greater and more ſubſtantial in itſelf than the other; yet more accommodated to our apprehenſions, who are naturally apt to dread the majeſty of God, and to ſeek out for ſome in favour with him, to be mediators and interceſſors with God for us, and to preſent our prayers and requeſts to him. And this was the original of the addreſſes of the Heathens to the angels and ſouls departed, as a kind of intermediate and inferior deities, to preſent their prayers, and intercede with the great God in their behalf. And as, in compliance with the general apprehenſion of mankind, concerning the appeaſing of the Deity by all ſorts of ſacrifices, God was pleaſed to provide one ſacrifice, which, by being once offered, ſhould obtain eternal redemption for us, and perfect for ever them that are ſanctified, and by this means to put an end both to the carnal ſacrifices of the law, and the barbarous and inhuman ſacrifices of the Pagan worſhip; ſo, in like condeſcenſion to the general inclinations of mankind, to addreſs themſelves to God by ſeveral mediators and interceſſors, God hath appointed one only Mediator between God and man, the man Chriſt Jeſus, who gave himſelf a ranſom for all, thereby to put an end to that infinite ſuperſtition, which had obtained in the world for ſo many ages, of addreſſing their prayers to God by the mediation of good angels, and departed ſouls of their heroes and great men, who were, as I may ſo call them, the Pagan Saints.

So that as, under the goſpel, God hath appointed but one ſacrifice for ſin, that ſhould be of eternal efficacy; ſo but one Mediator in heaven for ſinners, to offer up our prayers to God, and to intercede continually for us, in the power and virtue of that one ſacrifice once offered for the redemption of mankind. And therefore it is every whit as contrary to the genius and design of the Christian religion, to apply ourselves to other intercessors with God in heaven for us, whether saints or angels, or even the blessed virgin herself, as it would be to continue still the Jewish sacrifices, not to say the Heathen. For it is not clearer that there is but one proper sacrifice under the gospel, viz. that of Christ upon the cross, than that there is but one Mediator and Intercessor with God in heaven for us. Nay, St Paul speaks as if the Christian religion did no more admit of more Mediators than one, than of more Gods than one, 1 Tim. ii. 5. There is one God, and one Mediator between God and men, the man Christ Jesus, who gave himself a ransom for all. Nor is the force of this plain text to be avoided, by saying that the Apostle here speaks of a mediator of redemption, as appears by the following words, who gave himself a ransom for all. For it is plain likewise, that he speaks also of a mediator of intercession, and affirms him to be but one, as is evident from what goes before. The Apostle directs prayers and supplications to be made for all men, and then, at the 5th verse, to whom Christians should address these prayers, and by whose mediation, viz. to God, in the name and mediation of Jesus Christ. For, says he, there is one God, and one Mediator between God and men, the man Christ Jesus. So that the Apostle's discourse does as plainly infer, that there is but one mediator of intercession, as that there is but one mediator of redemption.

And indeed whosoever considers that, quite throughout the New Testament, our Saviour and his apostles do constantly direct Christians to make their prayers to God in the name and mediation of Jesus Christ, and no where give so much as the least intimation of applying ourselves to any other intercessors with God in heaven for us, may justly wonder how this superstition of praying to angels and saints departed, which hath no manner of countenance, and is by necessary consequence so clearly forbidden, should ever prevail among Christians; especially since it is a plain diminution of the virtue and efficacy of our Saviour's intercession; or if it add nothing to it, is perfectly vain and endless, and to no purpose. For what need of any other interceſſors with God in heaven for us, if that be true which the Apoſtle to the Hebrews moſt expreſly affirms, that Chriſt is able to ſave them to the uttermoſt that come to God by him, ſeeing he ever liveth to make interceſſion for them?

The prevalency and efficacy whereof may juſtly miniſter to us in all our diſtreſſes and troubles, ſome peculiar ground of comfort above what ſprings from the bare contemplation of the divine nature; that we have ſo powerful a friend to intercede with God for us, one ſo dearly beloved of him, and ſo highly in his favour; one that is advanced far above all principalities and powers, and every name that is named, not only in this world, but in that which is to come; and, conſequently, able to do more for us, than all the bleſſed ſaints and angels in heaven, and more than all the powers of darkneſs can do againſt us.

1. That our Advocate is ſo nearly related to us, having condeſcended, by aſſuming our nature, to be allied to us, to become bone of our bone, and fleſh of our fleſh, ſo that we may addreſs ourſelves to him with great freedom and confidence, and, as the Apoſtle expreſſeth it, Heb. iv. 16. We may come with boldneſs to this throne of grace, for ſeaſonable mercy and help in time of need. For we may moſt aſſuredly believe, that he who ſtooped to be made man, and to become one of us, will, upon all occaſions, moſt heartily be concerned for us, and ready to help us.

2. Conſidering that he hath already given the greateſt demonſtration of his kindneſs and compaſſion to us; we may be ſure that he who hath done and ſuffered ſuch things for our ſakes, hath a very tender love and affection for us; he who was contented to die for us, will do for us any thing elſe that may do us good.

3. And that we might have no doubt of his forwardneſs and inclination to pity and relieve us, he ſuffered the moſt grievous things himſelf that any man could ſuffer, that from the experience and remembrance of his own ſufferings, he might learn to compaſſionate us. And this the Apoſtle particularly inſiſts upon, as a very comfortable consideration to us in all our trials and sufferings: Heb. iv. 15, 16. For we have not an high priest, which cannot be touched with the feeling of our infirmities, but was in all points tempted like as we are; yet without sin. Let us therefore come boldly unto the throne of grace, that we may obtain mercy, and find grace to help in time of need. And chap. ii. 17, 18. Wherefore in all things it behoved him to be made like unto his brethren, that he might be a merciful and faithful high priest: for in that he himself suffered being tempted, he is able to succour them that are tempted. So that we may rest assured of his pity and support in all our afflictions and trials, who knows both the infirmity of our nature, and hath himself had experience of greater sufferings than any of us either shall or can be exercised withal.

And as for the general concernment of his truth and religion, and church upon earth, that which all good men are with so much reason solicitous about, this is his proper care, and the great business that he is intent upon, now that he is in heaven, to protect and defend his truth and religion, and the church which professeth it, so that the gates of hell shall not prevail against it. This is his kingdom, for the effectual administration whereof all power in heaven and earth is committed to him. And as he intercedeth with his Father for every particular Christian, so much more for his church, which is his body; to preserve her from all dangers that threaten her ruin, and to guard her against the power and malice of all her enemies. For to this end was he advanced to the right-hand of God, that he might continue there, till he had made his enemies his footstool. And this kingdom of his shall continue in his hands, till he have put down all rule, and all authority, and power that sets itself against him; for he must reign, till he have put all things under his feet.

So that though truth may be obscured and clouded for a time, and the professors of it grievously harassed and oppressed, yet it shall not finally be borne down, but shall at length prevail against all opposition; because he who hath undertaken the protection of it is mighty, the King of kings, and Lord of lords, the chief favourite of heaven, who is continually at the right- hand of God, and lives for ever to make interceſſion for us.

And thus I have, as briefly as I well could, repreſented to you, what force and virtue there is in the two remedies here preſcribed by our Saviour, for the mitigating and allaying of our troubles, viz. faith in God, the great Creator and Governor of the world; and faith likewiſe in himſelf, the Son of God and Saviour of men. Let not your heart be troubled: ye believe in God, believe alſo in me.

And now to apply this diſcourſe to ourſelves; the inferences I ſhall make from it ſhall be theſe three:

I. That in all our troubles and adverſities, of what kind ſoever, we ſhould ſupport and comfort ourſelves with the firm belief of the providence of almighty God, and of his tender and compaſſionate care of mankind, eſpecially of thoſe that fear him, and put their truſt in his mercy.

II. We ſhould put a high value upon the Chriſtian religion; and hold faſt the profeſſion of it without wavering; which affords to us ſuch firm and ſolid grounds of comfort and ſupport under all troubles and afflictions, as are no where elſe to be found; ſuch as neither the light of nature, nor any other revelation that God ever made of himſelf to mankind, do give us the notice and knowledge of.

III. Since the prayers of Chriſt are ſo effectual and prevalent with God, let us, by frequent and fervent prayers, make our requeſts known to God; and let us, with confidence and full aſſurance of faith, addreſs ourſelves to the throne of grace, that we may obtain mercy, and find favour with him for our ſeaſonable help and ſupport in the time of need. I ſhall ſpeak briefly to theſe, and ſo conclude this diſcourſe.

I. In all troubles and adverſities, of what kind ſoever, under all afflictions and ſufferings that may befal us, of loſs or pain, of poverty and ſickneſs, of reproach and perſecution for righteouſneſs ſake, and under the moſt fearful apprehenſions of danger and diſtreſs, to all human appearance inevitably threatening us in our perſons and private concernments, or with relation to the public peace or tranquillity, or to that which ought to be infinitely dearer to us than all theſe, our religion, which is the great concernment of our ſouls, and of all eternity, when we have no hope any where elſe, no viſible means of help and redreſs, when we are almoſt in deſpair of avoiding the danger, and warding off the blow that is made at us, when ruin and deſtruction ſeem juſt to have overtaken us, and are ready to devour us with open mouth, and to ſwallow us up quick; in a word, when we are reduced to the greateſt extremity and diſtreſs that can be imagined, even in this caſe, if ever it ſhould happen, we ſhould ſupport our minds with a firm belief of the providence of almighty God, and of his tender and compaſſionate care of mankind, eſpecially of thoſe that fear him, and put their truſt in his mercy; and comfort ourſelves, as the holy and divine Pſalmiſt does, in all our fears and troubles: What time I am afraid, I will truſt in thee, Pſal. lvi. 3. And he tells us, that every good man hath ground and reaſon for this confidence: Pſal. cxii. 7, 8. ſpeaking of the righteous and good man, He ſhall not, ſays he, be afraid of evil tidings; his heart is fixed, truſting in the Lord. His heart is eſtabliſhed, he ſhall not be afraid. And Pſal. xxvii. 1. The Lord is my light and my ſalvation: whom ſhall I fear? the Lord is the ſtrength of my life; of whom ſhall I be afraid? Pſal. lxii. 5, 6, 7, 8. My ſoul, wait thou only upon God; for my expectation is from him. He only is my rock and my ſalvation; he is my defence, I ſhall not be moved. In God is my ſalvation and my glory; the rock of my ſtrength, and my refuge is in God. Truſt in him at all times, ye people, pour out your heart before him. God is a refuge for us. And Pſalm xlvi. 1, 2, 7. God is our refuge and ſtrength; a very preſent help in time of trouble. Therefore will we not fear, though the earth be removed; and though the mountains be carried into the midſt of the ſea. The Lord of hoſts is with us; the God of Jacob is our refuge. To which I will add that comfortable promiſe, Iſ. xxvi. 3. Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace, whoſe mind is ſtayed on thee; becauſe he truſteth in thee.

Thus we may, in all conditions that may befal us, in our greateſt fears and troubles, eaſe our hearts, by repoſing ourſelves upon God, in confidence of his ſupport and deliverance, of his care and providence to prevent and divert the evils we fear; or of his gracious help to bear u up under them; and of his mercy and goodneſs to deliver us from them, when he ſees it beſt; provided always that we be careful of our duty to him, and do what becomes us, and nothing elſe. For our more particular direction herein,

1. Let us depend upon God, and entirely confide in his goodneſs and care, and truſt his wiſdom and power for our protection and deliverance: for here is our great ſecurity. In all our difficulties and troubles, the providence of God is infinitely more to us, than any prudence and conduct of our own. He hath a thouſand ways to divert and put by the evils which are levelled againſt us, to turn the counſels of men backward, and make their devices of none effect. When we can do nothing to help and ſave ourſelves, his right hand, and his arm, and the light of his countenance, can do it, if he have a favour for us.

2. Let us ſo truſt God, as to neglect no prudent and lawful means for our ſecurity and preſervation from evil. Let us not, by our raſhneſs and folly, provoke trouble and danger, and bring them upon ourſelves.

Let us, according to our Saviour's counſel, be wiſe as ſerpents, and innocent as doves. Let us uſe all that care and prudence which is conſiſtent with innocence and a good conſcience: and when we have done that, let us be no further ſolicitous, but reſign up ourſelves, and all our concernments to the good pleaſure of God, and the diſpoſal of his wiſe providence; and leave it to him, who made the world, to govern it, becauſe he certainly underſtands it beſt.

3. Let us be ſure to keep within the bounds of our duty, trying no unlawful w ys for our eaſe and preſervation and reſcue from the evils which we fear and lie under; by looſening the bonds of ſubjection and obedience to authority, or by any other ſiniſter and indirect means. For let us aſſure ourſelves, that God is never more concerned to appear for us, than when, out of conſcience of our duty to him, we are contented rather to ſuffer, than work our deliverance by undue means. Let us commit ourſelves to him in well-doing, and do nothing, no, not for the cauſe of religion, which is contrary to the plain rules and precepts of it.

II. We ſhould put a high value upon the Chriſtian religion, and hold faſt the profeſſion of it, without wavering, which affords to us ſuch firm and ſolid grounds of comfort and ſupport under all troubles and afflictions, as are no where elſe to be found; ſuch as neither the light of nature, nor any other revelation that God ever made of himſelf to mankind, do give us notice and knowledge of.

We ſhould highly value the Chriſtian religion, which hath brought life and immortality to light, and hath made ſo clear a diſcovery to us of the glorious and eternal rewards of another world, for the encouragement of our faith, and ſupport of our patience, under the evils and preſſures of this life; and which promiſeth, and is ready, to afford to every ſincere Chriſtian, the precious aids and comforts of God's Holy Spirit, to ſuſtain the weakneſs of human nature under the greateſt tribulations and ſufferings; and does likewiſe aſſure us of the ſpecial efficacy of our prayers with God, and ſets before us the beſt and moſt admirable pattern that ever was, of a contented and chearful ſubmiſſion to the will of God, in the ſaddeſt condition incident to human nature, and of perfect patience and compoſure of mind under the apprehenſion of approaching evils, and the ſenſe of preſent ſufferings; and, laſtly, which aſſures us of a moſt compaſſionate, and prevalent, and perpetual patron, and advocate, and interceſſor with God in heaven for us. All theſe are peculiar advantages of the Chriſtian religion, and ought to be ſo many endearments of it to us, and engagements to hold faſt the profeſſion of it. This builds our comfort and hope upon a rock, which will abide firm againſt all rains, and winds, and ſtorms. And if we ſuffer ourſelves to be removed from it, we quit the only foundation of all our comfort in this life, and happineſs in the next. So that if we would hold faſt the confidence, and the rejoicing of hope, firm unto the end, we muſt take heed, as the Apoſtle to the Hebrews, chap. iii. 12. cautions the Chriſtians in his time; we muſt, I ſay, take heed, leſt there be in any of us an evil heart of unbelief, in departing from the living God, that is, to fall off from the profeſſion of his truth and religion: A religion worthy of all men to be received and adhered to; becauſe, as it calls us to ſufferings, ſo it affords the greateſt comforts and ſupports under them, as is evident from the chearful and joyful behaviour of the primitive Chriſtians and martyrs, under the greateſt extremities of ſufferings and torments, the like inſtances whereto of patience and conſtancy, under ſo long and repeated perſecutions, no other religion that ever was in the world is able to produce.

III. and laſtly, Since the prayers of Chriſtians are ſo effectual and prevalent with God, let us, by frequent and fervent prayer, in every thing make our requeſts known to God: and let us, with confidence and full aſſurance of faith, addreſs ourſelves to the throne of grace, that we may obtain mercy, and find favour with him for our ſeaſonable help and ſupport in time of need. Let us, as our Saviour exhorts his diſciples, watch and pray, leſt we enter into temptation. And, as the Apoſtle likewiſe exhorts, let us be ſober, and vigilant, and watch unto prayer, taking all opportunities for it, and ſpending much time in this duty; than which none of all the duties injoined by the Chriſtian religion, will turn to a better and more comfortable account, if our hearts and lives be but anſwerable to our prayers.

Let us earneſtly beg of God, that his watchful and merciful providence would undertake the care of us; that he would fit and prepare us for every condition which he hath deſigned to bring us into; and that he would teach us to demean ourſelves in it as we ought; that he would conſider our frailties, and lay no greater load of affliction upon us, than he will give us grace and ſtrength to bear; that if he ſees it good to exerciſe any of us with afflictions and ſufferings in any kind, he would make us able to ſtand in that evil day, and when we have done all to ſtand.

And if inſtead of vain murmurings, and complaints, and terrifying ourſelves with fears of what may never happen, we would, after the example of holy David, betake ourſelves to prayer, and by this means engage the providence of God for our protection from evil, or for our ſupport under it; we ſhould certainly do much better ter for ourſelves, and contribute much more, than we can do any other way, to the prevention of any evil that we can fear, or to the mitigating or ſhortening of it, as to God's infinite wiſdom and goodneſs ſhall ſeem beſt.

And let us always be mindful of that caution which our Saviour gives to his diſciples, that they might always be in a due preparation for the coming of our Lord to judgment, Luke xxi. 34, 35, 36. Take heed to yourſelves, leſt at any time your hearts be overcharged with ſurfeiting and drunkenneſs, and the cares of this life, and ſo that day come upon you unawares. For as a ſnare ſhall it come upon all them that dwell upon the face of the whole earth. Watch ye therefore, and pray always, that ye may be accounted worthy to eſcape all theſe things that ſhall come to paſs, and to ſtand before the Son of man. This caution and counſel does proportionably hold, as our preparation for any other evil day day of affliction and ſuffering in this world; that we ſhould beware of ſenſuality, and an inordinate love to the things of this world, and care about them; becauſe theſe ſoften and effeminate our ſpirits, and render them unfit for the day of adverſity: and that we ſhould watch and pray; becauſe theſe are the beſt preparations againſt an evil day, and perhaps may prevent it, at leaſt as to ourſelves, if God think it fit for us, and count us worthy to eſcape it.

To conclude then this whole diſcourſe: In all our fears and troubles, in all afflictions and adverſities that may happen to us in this world, let us encourage ourſelves in the Lord our God, the Father of mercy, and the God of all conſolation; and in his bleſſed Son Jeſus Chriſt, our Lord, the high prieſt of our profeſſion, and the author and finiſher of our faith, whom God hath exalted far above all principalities and powers, and every name that is named, not only in this world, but in that which is to come, and hath given him to be head over all things to his church; remembering that we and all our concernments are in the hands of his providence, where we are infinitely ſafer than in any counſel and wiſdom of our own. And if, after all, it be the will of God to exerciſe any of us with more than ordinary trials, to lay affliction upon our loins, and to ſuffer men to ride over our heads, as the Pſalmiſt expreſſeth it, let us, as St Peter exhorts, commit the keeping of our ſouls to him in well-doing, as to a faithful Creator, who is able to keep that which is committed to him, and to preſerve us to his heavenly kingdom; which let us all humbly and earneſtly beg, for the ſake of Jeſus Chriſt: To whom with the Father and the Holy Ghoſt, be all honour, and glory, might, majeſty, and dominion, now and for ever.

SERMON CCXIX.

Of the nature of faith in general.

HEB. xi. 6.

But without faith it is impoſſible to pleaſe God.

The firſt ſermon on this text.

BEfore I come to the words themſelves, in order to our better underſtanding of them, we will take into conſideration the deſign of this epiſtle, that ſo we may ſee more clearly the relation that theſe words have to the foregoing diſcourſe. Who the penman of this epiſtle was, I ſhall not tell you, becauſe I do not know, nor is it much material to know it; but whoever wrote it, he had this very good deſign in the writing of it, to perſuade the Jews to hold faſt the profeſſion of the goſpel, notwithſtanding all the ſufferings and perſecutions it expoſed them to. And to this purpoſe he ſhews at large, what prerogatives the goſpel hath above the legal adminiſtration. The law was given by the diſpoſition of angels, in the hand of a mediator, that is, Moſes; but the goſpel is revealed to us by the Son of God; a perſon not only above Moſes, who was a mere man; but above angels. The goſpel is the ſubſtance and reality of the types and ceremonies, monies, and the very good things themſelves, that were obſcurely repreſented by thoſe ſhadows. It is a teſtament eſtabliſhed upon better promiſes, the clear promiſes of eternal life, which were but darkly revealed in the Old Teſtament, that being eſtabliſhed either ſolely or principally upon temporal promiſes; and it is a perfect and complete diſpenſation, that hath in it all things requiſite to attain its end, and therefore ſhall never ſtand in need of any further change or alteration. Theſe are the heads of thoſe arguments which the author of this epiſtle does largely diſcourſe upon.

Now, the goſpel having in theſe reſpects the advantage of the legal diſpenſation, the Apoſtle doth all along in this epiſtle earneſtly exhort the Jews to a conſtant profeſſion and ſtedfaſt belief of the goſpel, and not to return back from Chriſtianity to Judaiſm, which was a far leſs perfect inſtitution. Chap. ii. 1. Therefore we ought to give the more earneſt heed to the things which we have heard, leſt at any time we ſhould let them ſlip, παραῤῥυῶμεν, leſt we ſhould fall away, ſo the word may be rendered. And chap. iii. 12. Take heed, brethren, leſt there be in any of you an evil heart of unbelief, in departing from the living God. And chap. iv. 1. Let us therefore fear, leſt a promiſe being left us of entering into his reſt, any of you ſhould ſeem to come ſhort of it. And chap. x. 23. Let us hold faſt the profeſſion of our faith without wavering.

After which he declares the danger of apoſtaſy, or falling off from the belief and profeſſion of the goſpel which they had entertained: ver. 26. For if we ſin wilfully after we have received the knowledge of the truth, there remaineth no more ſacrifice for ſin. He tells them they would be ſhrewdly tempted to apoſtaſy by the reproaches, afflictions, and perſecutions that they would meet withal: but the promiſes of the goſpel were ſufficient to ſupport and bear up good men under theſe, if they were but firmly perſuaded of the truth of them: and though they did not for the preſent receive the things promiſed, yet a firm belief of them would carry them through all ſufferings, and make them hold out under them. The juſt ſhall live by faith, ver. 38.

And

And having mentioned the power of faith, that is, of a confident perſuaſion of the truth and reality of the promiſes of the goſpel to ſupport men under ſufferings, he gives an account how faith uſes to have this influence, ver. 1. Faith is the ſubſtance of things hoped for; ſo we render the word ὑποστάσις: but it might be much better rendered, both according to the frequent uſe of it in the Septuagint, and in the New Teſtament, a confidence of things hoped for, that is, a confident expectation of things hoped for, or a firm perſuaſion that our hopes will not be fruſtrated. And as this is more agreeable to the ſcope and deſign of the Apoſtle, ſo likewiſe to the common acceptation of this word in the New Teſtament, for which I will appeal to two places. 2 Cor. ix. 4. That we be not put to ſhame in this confidence of boaſting, ἐν τῇ ὑποστάσει ταύτῃ. The other text is in this epiſtle, chap. iii. 14. That we hold faſt the beginning of our confidence, τὴν ἀρχὴν ὑποστάσεως, which is of the very ſame ſenſe with παῤῥησία, at the 6th verſe. If we hold faſt the confidence, παῤῥησίαν, and rejoicing of the hope firm unto the end. And the evidence of things not ſeen, ἔλεγχος, the conviction, a being convinced or perſuaded of the truth of thoſe things, for which we have no ocular or ſenſible demonſtration. Now, if faith in the promiſes of the goſpel do perſuade us and give us ſatisfaction that we ſhall receive a reward, which will outweigh and countervail our preſent ſufferings, then faith is likely to ſupport us under ſufferings.

And that this is no ſtrange thing which the Apoſtle ſpeaks of faith, he ſhews, that in all ages, faith hath been the principle of all holy and heroic actions. By it the elders obtained a good report; it is that which made the holy men of the Old Teſtament ſo famous: and this he proves throughout this chapter, by a large induction of particular inſtances, in which we ſee the power of faith, the wonderful effects of it, and the mighty works it hath done in the world.

But becauſe he ſaid before, that faith is the evidence, or conviction of things not ſeen, as well as a confident expectation of things hoped for, before he comes to inſtance in the effects of faith upon particular perſons in the

Old

Old Teſtament, he proves it to be the evidence of things not ſeen, that is, being convinced and perſuaded of things of which we have no ſenſible and ocular demonſtration, ver. 3. Through faith we underſtand that the worlds were framed by the word of God, ſo that the things which are ſeen, were not made of things which do appear ; that is, though we were not preſent at the making of the world, nor did ſee it framed ; yet we are ſatisfied, and do believe, that it was made by the powerful word of God, and that all thoſe things which we ſee were not produced out of things which do now appear, but either immediately out of nothing, or a dark confuſed chaos.

And having thus proved that we may be perſuaded of things we do not ſee, of things paſt or future, he comes to the particular inſtances of the holy men of the Old Teſtament, in whom the power of faith did appear. He begins with Abel, who being perſuaded of the being of God, and the perfection and excellency of the divine nature, and, conſequently, that he was worthy to be ſerved with the beſt, by virtue of this faith offered up to God a more excellent ſacrifice than Cain. The ſecond inſtance is in Enoch, who being perſuaded of the being of God, and of his goodneſs to reward them that ſerve him, was a righteous man, and ſtudious to pleaſe God ; and as a reward of this faith and obedience, God tranſlated him that he ſhould not ſee death : upon which the Apoſtle aſſumes, ver. 6. But without faith it is impoſſible to pleaſe God : As if he had ſaid, Unleſs a man do believe, and be perſuaded of ſome principles, it is impoſſible any man ſhould be religious, or endeavour to do any thing that is pleaſing or acceptable to God: for religion, and the ſervice of God, and an endeavour to pleaſe him, do ſuppoſe, at leaſt, that I believe and am perſuaded of theſe two things, of the being, and of the goodneſs of God, that there is ſuch a being as I ſerve and ſeek to pleaſe, and that his goodneſs is ſuch, that it will not be in vain to ſerve him, he will not let me be a loſer by it.

And that here by pleaſing we are to underſtand in general the performing any action of religion, is evident from the equivalent terms which are uſed in the next words, For he that cometh to God, muſt believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that ſeek him ; where coming to God, and ſeeking of him, are of the ſame importance with pleaſing him. Now, to come to God, and ſeek him, in ſcripture-phraſe ſignify the ſum of religion; it being uſual, in the language of ſcripture, to expreſs the whole of religion by any eminent principle, or part, or effect of it, as by the knowledge, remembrance, or fear of God in the Old Teſtament; by the love of him, and faith in him, in the New; by coming to him, ſeeking him, calling upon his name, and pleaſing of him.

Now, that coming to God, and ſeeking him, are of the ſame importance here with pleaſing of him, will be clear to any that conſider the Apoſtle's reaſoning here in the text, which ſuppoſeth theſe to be the ſame, otherwiſe there would be no force in his argument. For the propoſition which he proves, is, That without faith it is impoſſible to pleaſe God. The argument he uſeth is this, If every one that comes to God muſt believe that he is, &c. then, without faith it is impoſſible to pleaſe him ; but every one that comes to God muſt believe that he is. Now, unleſs coming to God, and ſeeking him, be the ſame thing with pleaſing him, this would be no good argument; for there would be four terms in it; but if theſe phraſes be made equivalent, then the argument is good. Thus, if every one that comes to God, that is, that will pleaſe him, muſt believe that he is, &c. then without faith it is impoſſible to pleaſe him : but every one that comes to God, that is, that will pleaſe him, muſt believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently ſeek him, or that endeavour to pleaſe him : therefore without faith it is impoſſible to pleaſe him.

Which propoſition doth not only ſignify that faith is neceſſary to religion, and a condition without which it cannot be; but implies likewiſe, that it is a cauſe or principle of it; not only the foundation upon which all religion muſt be built, but the fountain from whence it ſprings. For this I take to be implied in the words, not only that there can be no religion unleſs we believe a God; but ſuppoſing this truth firmly believed, that there is a God, it will have a great influence upon men to make them religious. For the Apoſtle having before ſpoken of the power of faith upon Abel and Enoch, that it put them upon pleaſing God, he aſſumes, in the next words, But without faith, &c. As if he had ſaid, That ye may know what was the principle of their religion, of their holineſs and obedience, let us imagine that a man ſhould believe nothing concerning the being of a God, or the bleſſedneſs of thoſe that ſerve him; what would be the iſſue? Why, this certainly, there would be no religion, no ſuch thing as ſerving of God, or endeavouring to pleaſe him; for unleſs we believe that he is, and that he will reward thoſe that ſeek to pleaſe him, it is impoſſible, that is, it is unreaſonable to think men ſhould attempt to pleaſe him. So that faith is the cauſe and principle of religion: it is the thing, quo poſito, ponitur effectus; et quo ſublato, tollitur. Do but ſuppoſe and admit that a man truly believes there is a God; and he will ſeek to pleaſe him: but if you ſuppoſe a man believes no ſuch thing; he will caſt off all religion. This is the plain meaning of the words; not, as ſome have thought, that without faith a man may perform religious actions; but then they would not be accepted, or pleaſing to God: but that which the Apoſtle means is, Without faith it is impoſſible there ſhould be any religion: not that religious acts ſhould be performed in an acceptable manner; as if Cain had offered as good a ſacrifice as Abel, only faith made the difference; but Cain did not believe, was not perſuaded of the being of God and his excellency, therefore thought to put off God with any thing: Abel believed, and did offer a more excellent ſacrifice, not more excellent becauſe it was mixed with faith, but it was more excellent in itſelf.

The obſervation, therefore, from theſe words, is this, That faith is one great principle of all religious actions.

In the handling of this, I ſhall endeavour,

Firſt, To fix and ſettle the true notion of faith, whereby we may come to underſtand the general nature of it.

Secondly, To confirm the truth of the propoſition.

Thirdly, Draw ſome inferences from hence.

Firſt, To ſettle and fix the true notion of faith, whereby we may come to underſtand the general nature of it. I find that moſt who write upon this ſubject have marvelloufly puzzled themſelves with the various acceptations of this word πίστις, and the verb πιστεύειν, insomuch that some have undertaken to enumerate above twenty distinct significations of this word. I cannot find so many, it may be others may; but hereby, instead of clearing the notion of faith, they have involved it, and made it more intricate, and have made men believe, that it is a notion very remote from common understanding: whereas there is not any word that is in common use, that is more plain and easy, and which any one may understand better than this of faith and believing. Therefore, in the explication of it, I shall attend to the use of it in common speech, and in all authors, as well profane as sacred; and I shall not guide myself by terms of art, which have been received in the schools, and have confounded the meaning of words, by distorting them from the common and received use of them; but shall govern myself by the nature of things to which this word in common use is applied.

I shall remove two acceptations of it which are less usual, and then fix the common and general notion of it, to which all the other more particular significations may be referred. The two less usual acceptations are these:

First, It is sometimes put for the particular grace or virtue which is called fidelity, or faithfulness in our promises and contracts; and in this sense it is sometimes used in common discourse, and in all sorts of writers. I shall only mention a text or two where it is so taken: Matth. xxiii. 23. And have omitted the weightier things of the law, judgment, and mercy, and faith, that is, fidelity. And Rom. iii. 3. with relation to God, shall their unbelief make the faith of God of none effect? that is, his faithfulness in his promises. Tit. ii. 13. Not purloining, but shewing all good fidelity, πίστιν πᾶσαν, all faith.

Secondly, It is sometimes put for spiritual gifts, and particularly the gift of miracles, which were wrought by the power of faith. Rom. xii. 3. According as God hath dealt to every man the measure of faith, that is, of spiritual gifts of prophesying, or ministry, or exhortation, as it is explained afterward. 1 Cor. xii. 9. To another is given faith by the same spirit; that is, a power of miracles in general, as learned interpreters think. Nor doth that which is added afterward, that to another is given the working of miracles, prejudice this interpretation; for ἐνεργήματα δυνάμεων, the operation of powers, which we render of miracles, ſeems to ſignify ſome ſpecial ſort of miracles, not the power of miracles in general. And this ſeems to be favoured by the acceptation of it in the next chapter, ver. 2. And though I have all faith, ſo that I could remove mountains; where faith is undoubtedly taken for the power of miracles.

Theſe being removed, as very alien and remote from the common and uſual acceptation of the word, I come now to fix the general notion of faith, to which all other acceptations of it may eaſily be reduced: and it is this.

Faith is a perſuaſion of the mind concerning any thing; concerning the truth of any propoſition, concerning the exiſtence, or futurition, or lawfulneſs, or convenience, or poſſibility, or goodneſs of any thing, or the contrary; or concerning the credit of a perſon, or the contrary. And this notion is not only agreeable to the proper notion of the word πίστις, which comes from πείθω, to perſuade, but is warranted from the common uſe of it in this latitude. It is ordinary for men to ſay, they believe, or are perſuaded, ſuch a propoſition is true or falſe, ſuch a thing is or is not, ſuch an event will be or will not be, that ſuch an action is lawful or unlawful, ſuch a thing is good or bad, convenient or inconvenient, poſſible or impoſſible to be done; or that they believe ſuch a perſon, or do not believe him. And I could ſhew from ſcripture, that believing is applied to all theſe matters, and many more; I will only inſtance in one or two.

That faith is frequently uſed for the perſuaſion of the truth of a doctrine, or of the veracity of God or Chriſt, I ſhall not need to produce any texts, there are ſo many.

That faith is uſed for a perſuaſion of the lawfulneſs of an action, the 14th chapter to the Romans doth abundantly teſtify. Ver. 2. One believeth that he may eat all things; that is, is perſuaded in his mind, that all ſorts of meat are lawful without diſtinction. Ver. 22. Haſt thou faith? that is, art thou perſuaded or ſatisfied in thy mind of the lawfulneſs of thoſe indifferent things he had been ſpeaking of? Ver. 23, He that doubteth is damned if he eat, becauſe he eateth not of faith: for whatſoever is not of faith, is sin; that is, whatsoever is not done with the persuasion and satisfaction of our minds that we may lawfully do it, is sin. I shall trouble you with no more instances.

Now, this being the general notion of faith, that it is a persuasion of the mind concerning any thing, from hence, by a metonymy, it comes to be put for the argument whereby this persuasion is wrought in us. Hence it is, that among the rhetoricians πίστεις are any kind of argument or proof which orators make use of to persuade men; and there is one place in the New Testament, where πίστις seems to be used in this sense, or very near it, Acts xvii. 31. Because he hath appointed a day in which he will judge the world, &c. whereof he hath given assurance unto all men, in that he hath raised him from the dead, πίστιν παρέχων πᾶσιν, having offered faith to all men; that is, having given us this argument for the proof of it, that he raised Christ from the dead.

Sometimes it is put for the object of this persuasion, or the matter or thing whereof we are persuaded. And thus, frequently in the New Testament, the gospel, which is the object of our faith, the thing which we believe, is called faith. And thus you find it used in that phrase of obedience to the faith, that is, to the gospel, Acts vi. 7. Rom. i. 5, xvi. 26. And in this sense faith, that is, the gospel, is frequently opposed to the dispensation of the law, Rom. iii. 27, 31. and x. 16. Gal. i. 23. He that persecuted us in times past, now preacheth the faith which once he destroyed. Gal iii. 2. the hearing of the gospel is called the hearing of faith; ver. 20. Before faith came; and ver. 25. But after that faith is come. Eph. iv. 5. There is one faith, that is, one gospel which we believe. 1 Tim. iv. 6. Nourished up in the words of faith and of good doctrine.

The opposites to faith are unbelief and credulity. Unbelief, which is a not being persuaded of a thing, is the deficient extreme; or doubting, if it prevail to a degree of unbelief: and credulity, which is an easiness to believe things without any probable argument to induce our persuasion, is the redundant extreme.

The

The ſeat or ſubject of faith is the mind, or the heart, as the ſcripture uſually calls it. With the heart man believes, that is, with the ſoul: for I do not underſtand any real diſtinction of faculties; but if you will diſtinguiſh them, the proper ſeat of this perſuaſion is the underſtanding; the immediate effect of it is upon the will; by which it works upon the affections and the life.

And faith, in this general notion, is not oppoſed to error, and knowledge, and opinion; but comprehends all theſe under it. For if a man be perſuaded of that which is falſe, he believes a lie, as the ſcripture expreſſeth it; a man may be certainly perſuaded of a thing, that is, firmly believe it, which is knowledge; a man may be probably perſuaded of a thing, that is, believe it with ſome diffidence and uncertainty, and that is opinion.

But, for our better underſtanding of this general notion of faith, we will take into conſideration theſe four things.

I. The cauſe of it, or the argument whereby it is wrought.

II. The degrees of it, and the difference of them.

III. The natural efficacy and operation of it.

IV. The ſeveral kinds of it.

I. We will conſider the cauſe of faith, or the argument whereby it is wrought. Now, all the arguments whereby faith may be wrought in us, that is, a perſuaſion of any thing, will, I think, fall under one of theſe four heads; ſenſe, experience, reaſons drawn from the thing, or the authority and teſtimony of ſome perſon.

1. Senſe. Hence it is commonly ſaid, that ſeeing is believing, that is, one of the beſt arguments to perſuade us of any thing. That faith may be wrought by this argument, appears both from the nature of the thing, nothing being more apt to perſuade us of any thing than our ſenſes; and from ſeveral expreſſions in ſcripture. I will inſtance in one for all, John xx. 8. Then went in alſo the other diſciple into the ſepulchre, and he ſaw, and believed. And whereas ſcripture oppoſeth faith to ſight; as 2 Cor. v. 7. We walk by faith, and not by ſight; Heb xi 1. It is the evidence of things not ſeen; we are to underſtand that only concerning a belief of the things of another world, which are futurities, and invisible, which the Apostle is there speaking of; or of things which are of the same nature with these, as things past: not but that a man may very well be induced to believe a thing by his senses.

2. Experiencè; which though it may be sensible, and then it is the same argument with sense; yet sometimes it is not, and then it is an argument distinct from it. As for example, a man may, by experience, be persuaded or induced to believe this proposition, That his will is free, that he can do this, or not do it; which is a better argument than a demonstration to the contrary, if there could be one.

3. Reasons drawn from the thing; which may either be necessary and concluding, or else only probable, and plausible.

4. The authority and testimony of some credible person. Now, two things give authority and credit to the relation, or testimony, or assertion of a person concerning any thing; ability, and integrity. Ability, if he can be presumed to have a competent knowledge of what he relates, or asserts, or testifies; and integrity, if he may be presumed to be honest in his relation, and free from any design, or will to deceive. And to these heads, I think, all arguments of belief may be reduced.

II. The second thing to be considered is the degrees of faith, and the difference of them. And that there are degrees, I take for granted, though I shall afterwards have occasion to prove it in a divine faith; and these depend perfectly upon the capacity of the person that believes, or is persuaded. Now, the capacity, or incapacity, of persons are infinitely various, and not to be reduced to theory; but supposing a competent capacity in the person, then the degrees of faith or persuasion take their difference from the arguments, or motives, or inducements which are used to persuade. Where sense is the argument, there is the highest and firmest degree of faith, or persuasion. Next to that is experience, which is beyond any argument or reason from the thing. The faith, or persuasion which is wrought in us by reasons drawn from the thing, the degrees of it are, as the reasons are: if they be necessary and concluding, it is firm and certain in its kind: if only probable, according to the degrees of probability, it hath more or lefs of doubting mixed with it. Laſtly, the faith which is wrought in us by teſtimony or authority of a perſon, takes its degree from the credit of the perſon, that is, his ability and integrity. Now, becauſe all men are liars, that is, either may deceive, or be deceived, their teſtimony partakes of their infirmity, and ſo does the degree of perſuaſion wrought by it: But God being both infallible and true, and, conſequently, it being impoſſible that he ſhould either deceive, or be deceived, his teſtimony begets the firmeſt perſuaſion, and the higheſt degree of faith in its kind. But then it is to be conſidered, that there not being a revelation of a revelation in infinitum; that this is a divine teſtimony and revelation, we can only have rational aſſurance; and the degree of the faith, or perſuaſion which is wrought by a divine teſtimony, will be according to the ſtrength of the arguments which we have to perſuade us that ſuch a teſtimony is divine.

III. For the efficacy or operation of faith, we are to conſider, that the things we may believe, or be perſuaded of, are of two ſorts. Either, 1. They are ſuch as do not concern me: and then the mind reſts in a naked and ſimple belief of them, and a faith or perſuaſion of ſuch things has no effect upon me; but is apt to have, if ever it happen that the matter do concern me: or elſe, 2. The thing I believe or am perſuaded of doth concern me; and then it hath ſeveral effects, according to the nature of the thing I am perſuaded of, or the degree of the perſuaſion, or the capacity of the perſon that believes or is perſuaded. If the thing believed be of great moment, the effect of the faith is proportionable, cæteris paribus; and ſo, according to the degree of the perſuaſion: but if the perſon be indiſpoſed to the proper effects of ſuch a perſuaſion, by the power of contrary habits, as it often happens, the effect will be obtained with more difficulty, and may poſſibly be totally defeated, by caſting off the perſuaſion: for while it remains, it will operate, and endeavour, and ſtrive to work its proper effect. For example, a man may believe that wine is very pernicious to him; and yet a ſtrong inclination to it may render it very difficult for this perſuaſion ſion to work its proper effect upon him, which is to leave off wine, and may, at length, wholly defeat it, by furniſhing him with ſome colour of argument that may perſuade him otherwiſe.

IV. For the kinds of faith, they are ſeveral, according to the variety of objects or things believed. I ſhall reduce them all under theſe two general heads.

1. Faith is either civil or human; under which I comprehend the perſuaſion of things moral, and natural, and political, and the like: or,

2. Divine and religious, that is, a perſuaſion of things that concern religion. I know not whether theſe terms be proper, nor am I very ſolicitous, becauſe I know none fitter, and tell you what I mean by them.

The firſt kind of faith concerning things human and civil, I ſhall not ſpeak of, it being beſide my deſign.

The ſecond, which I call a religious and divine faith, comprehends three things under it, which are diſtinctly to be conſidered.

1. A perſuaſion of the principles of natural religion, which are known by the light of nature, as the exiſtence of a God, the immortality of the ſoul, and a future ſtate.

2. A perſuaſion of things ſupernatural, and revealed.

3. A perſuaſion of ſupernatural revelation. Theſe I deſign fully to handle. Thus I have prepared materials for a large diſcourſe, which, though it be neceſſary, is, I am ſenſible, but too tedious, and yet, poſſibly, more tedious to me than you.

SERMON CCXX.

Of a religious and divine faith.

HEB. xi. 6.

But without faith it is impoſſible to pleaſe God.

The ſecond ſermon on this text.

IN my laſt diſcourſe I came to treat of a religious and divine faith, which, I told you, comprehends under it three things, which I now proceed to conſider diſtinctly.

Thirdly, A perſuaſion of ſupernatural revelation.

Firſt, A perſuaſion of the principles of natural religion, ſuch as the light of nature could diſcover; ſuch are the exiſtence of God, the immortality of the ſoul, and a future ſtate. The things to be enquired concerning this kind of faith are theſe.

I. Whether this be truly and properly called faith.

II. What are the arguments whereby it is wrought.

III. Whether it admit of degrees or not, and what differences are obſervable in them.

IV. What are the proper and genuine effects of it.

V. In what ſenſe it may be ſaid to be divine faith.

I. Whether it may truly and properly be called faith, or not? If the general notion of faith which I have fixed before, viz. that it is a perſuaſion of the mind concerning any thing, be a true notion of faith, then there is no doubt but this may as properly be called faith as any thing can be; becauſe a man may be perſuaded in his mind concerning theſe things, that there is a God, that

But beſides this, if the ſcripture ſpeaks properly, as we have reaſon to believe it does, eſpecially when it treats profeſſedly of any thing, as the Apoſtle here does, then this queſtion is fully decided: for it is evident to any one that will but read this verſe, out of which I have taken my text, that the Apoſtle doth here, in this place, ſpeak of this kind of faith, that is, a belief or perſuaſion of the principles of natural religion. For after the Apoſtle had ſaid, that without faith it is impoſſible to pleaſe God; he immediately inſtanceth in the belief of the principles of natural religion, as neceſſary to the pleaſing of God, that is, to make a man religious. He that cometh to God muſt believe that he is; there is the exiſtence of God, the firſt principle of natural religion: and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently ſeek him: which implies the other two, the immortality of the ſoul, and a future ſtate; for, if good men ſhall be rewarded, there muſt be a ſubject capable of ſuch rewards, which brings in the immortality of the ſoul; and there muſt be a ſeaſon for theſe rewards, which, becauſe they are ſeldom beſtowed in this world, there muſt be a ſeaſon when they ſhall, which brings in a future ſtate after this life. So that whoever denies that a perſuaſion of theſe principles of natural religion may properly be called faith, he quarrels with the Apoſtle, and does not correct me, but the ſcriptures.

II. What are the arguments whereby this faith or perſuaſion of theſe principles of natural religion is wrought? You may remember that I reduced all thoſe arguments, whereby any kind of faith or perſuaſion is wrought in us, to theſe four heads; ſenſe, experience, reaſons drawn from the thing, and the teſtimony or authority of ſome perſon. Now, a faith or perſuaſion of theſe principles cannot be wrought in us by ſenſe: for no man hath ſeen God at any time, and being a pure ſpirit, he cannot be the object of any corporeal ſenſe. Nor can the ſoul, or any mode of its exiſtence, fall under any of our ſenſes; nor a future ſtate; becauſe ſenſe is only of things preſent. Nor can it be wrought in us merely by experience: for no man can conclude from any thing he experienceth in himſelf, that there is a God, unleſs he be firſt perſuaded of it by other arguments; and the immortality of the ſoul, and a future ſtate, are things which none in this life can experience. Nor can the authority or teſtimony of any perſon be the argument that induceth that perſuaſion. Not any human authority: for theſe things are of ſuch conſequence, and ſo much depends upon them, that is, the belief of them puts us upon ſo many things, which men would not do if they did not believe them; as, particularly, the venturing of our lives upon the account of religion, and all our worldly intereſts, if occaſion call for it; that it were a fond thing to take matters of ſuch moment and importance upon any man's bare word, without other aſſurance of them. Nor can the teſtimony or authority of God be the argument that perſuades me of the exiſtence of a God. I grant, that, for the other two, the immortality of the ſoul, and a future ſtate, it is an excellent, and may be a ſufficient argument. Though that theſe may be proved likewiſe by other arguments, without a revelation, is evident in the Heathens, who, by the light of nature, did aſſent to them without a revelation. But a divine revelation cannot poſſibly be an argument inducing me to believe the exiſtence of a God, for this plain reaſon; becauſe a divine revelation can be no argument to any that is not perſuaded that it is a divine revelation: but, before I can be perſuaded that any revelation is from God, I muſt be perſuaded there is a God; and, if ſo, there is no need of this argument to prove to me that there is one: and, therefore, you do not find it any where revealed in all the ſcripture, that there is a God. The ſcripture often declares, that Jehovah is the true and living God, and that, beſides him, there is no other; but it doth not reveal, but every where ſuppoſe, that there is one.

It remains then, that it muſt be another kind of argument whereby we muſt be perſuaded of the exiſtence of a God, and that is, by ſuch reaſons as may be drawn from things themſelves to perſuade us hereof; as, either from the notion and idea which we have of a God, that he is a being that hath all perfections, whereof neceſſary exiſtence is one, and, conſequently, that he muſt be; or elſe, from the univerſal conſent of all nations, and the generality of perſons agreeing in this apprehenſion, which cannot be attributed reaſonably to any other cauſe, than to impreſſions ſtamped upon our underſtandings by God himſelf; or, which is moſt plain of all, from this viſible frame of the world, which we cannot, without great violence to our underſtandings, impute to any other cauſe than a being endowed with infinite goodneſs, and power, and wiſdom, which is what we call God.

As for the other two principles of natural religion, the immortality of the ſoul, and a future ſtate; after we believe a God, we may be perſuaded of theſe from divine revelation; and that doth give us the higheſt and firmeſt aſſurance of them in the reſurrection of Chriſt from the dead. Yet I do not find but that theſe alſo are rather ſuppoſed, than expreſly revealed in the Bible. Indeed, the immortality of the ſoul may be inferred from ſeveral places of ſcripture, and the tenor of the whole Bible: and ſo a future ſtate, which, as for the thing itſelf, ſeems to be ſuppoſed as a thing acknowledged by natural light; only the ſcripture hath revealed the circumſtances of it more particularly to us, and given us higher aſſurance of the thing: but if there were no revelation, men might be perſuaded of theſe; and ſo the Heathens were by arguments drawn partly from the operations of the ſoul, which will almoſt perſuade any man that the ſoul is immortal; it being altogether unimaginable how a principle that is nothing elſe but matter, can either underſtand, or determine itſelf by its own will; all the motions of matter, that we know of, or can imagine, being neceſſary: and partly from the juſtice and goodneſs of God. The conſideration of God's goodneſs would perſuade a man, that, as he made all things very good, ſo he made them of the longeſt duration they were capable of: and the juſtice of God would eaſily induce a man to believe, ſeeing the providence of God doth generally, in this life, deal promiſcuouſly with good and bad men, that there ſhall be a day which will make a difference, and every man ſhall receive according to his works.

But I do not intend to inſiſt upon theſe arguments; all that I deſign is, to ſhew what kind of arguments do work a faith and perſuaſion in men concerning theſe principles of natural religion; and they are reaſons drawn from the thing.

And it is not always neceſſary to the working of this faith or perſuaſion, that theſe reaſons ſhould neceſſarily, yea, or truly conclude the principle to be believed: if they do it probably, and it appear ſo to me, it is enough to beget a perſuaſion in me of ſuch a thing. There are many men entertain the greateſt truths, and are firmly perſuaded of them, upon an incompetent argument, and ſuch as might perſuade them of any thing elſe as well; and ſuch perſons, if they have capacity and underſtanding, they are rather happy than wiſe in their religion. It falls out well that they happen to be in the right; for they might have been in the wrong upon the ſame terms. But if the perſons who believe the principles of religion on inſufficient arguments, and their belief have a real effect upon them, as it will, if it be true and permanent; if they be ignorant, and ſuch as want the ordinary advantages of improving their knowledge, they are wiſe enough; that is, they are as wiſe as God's providence hath made them, and the circumſtances of their education, and the condition of their life, will let them be.

The third thing to be enquired is, Whether this faith, or perſuaſion of the principles of natural religion, admit degrees, or not? and what differences are obſervable in them? That it does admit degrees, that is, that a man may be more or leſs perſuaded of the truth of theſe principles; is evident from the Heathens: ſome of whom did yield a more firm and unſhaken aſſent to them; others entertained them with a more faint perſuaſion of them, eſpecially of the immortality of the ſoul, and a future ſtate, about which moſt of them had many qualms and doubts. Of all the Heathens, Socrates ſeems to have had the trueſt and firmeſt perſuaſion of theſe things; which he did not only teſtify in words, but by the conſtancy, and calmneſs, and ſedate courage which he manifeſted at his death. Indeed, in his diſcourſe before his death, he ſays: "He "did not know whether his ſoul ſhall remain after his "body, and whether there be a happineſs reſerved for "good men in another world; but he thought ſo, and

" had ſuch hopes of it, that he was very willing to ven-
" ture his life upon theſe hopes." Which words, though they ſeem to be ſpoke doubtingly, as the manner of the academy was; yet, conſidering his manner of ſpeaking, which was modeſt, and not peremptory and dogmatical, they ſignify as great a confidence as he had of any thing, and they are high expreſſions of aſſurance. For we may believe, that the man who dies for any thing, how modeſtly ſoever he may expreſs himſelf, is very well aſſured of the truth of it. So that this faith and perſuaſion admits of degrees, the difference whereof is to be reſolved partly into the capacity of the perſons who believe, and partly into the ſtrength, or at leaſt appearance of ſtrength, in the arguments whereby it is wrought.

The fourth thing to be enquired is, What are the proper and genuine effects of this faith or perſuaſion? Now, that, in a word, is natural religion, which conſiſts in apprehenſions of God ſuitable to his nature, and affections towards him ſuitable to theſe apprehenſions, and actions ſuitable to both. He that believes there is ſuch a being in the world as God, that is, one infinitely good, and wiſe, and powerful, and juſt, and holy, and, in a word, clothed with all excellency, will have a great eſteem and reverence for him, and love to him, which he will teſtify in thoſe outward expreſſions of reſpect, which we call Worſhip. He that believes that this being is the original of all good, that he made the world, and all the creatures in it, and preſerves and governs them, he will depend upon him, and ſeek to him for every good thing, and acknowledge him for the author of them; which brings in prayer and thankſgiving. He that believes that he owes his being to God, and all the bleſſings of his life, will think it reaſonable that he ſhould be at his diſpoſal, will be willing to be governed by his laws, and ready to ſubmit to his pleaſure; which brings in obedience and ſubmiſſion to the will of God. He that believes there is another life after this, wherein men ſhall be rewarded or puniſhed, according as they have demeaned themſelves well or ill in this world, he will be encouraged to piety and virtue, and afraid to do any thing which his own reaſon tells him is diſpleaſing to the Deity, as he cannot but believe every thing is, that is contrary to the nature of God, or the perfection of his own nature, or the good order and happineſs of the world; which brings in temperance, and juſtice, and all other real virtues. And that the belief of theſe principles had this effect upon ſeveral of the Heathens, to make them in a good degree religious and virtuous, I doubt not; the moral and honeſt lives of many of them give real teſtimony of this; which natural religion and morality of theirs, how far it may avail them for their good, we are not concerned to determine. This we are ſure of, that it will make their condition more tolerable in another world; and, if they fall under condemnation, it will mitigate and allay their miſery.

V. In what ſenſe this faith or perſuaſion of the principles of natural religion may be ſaid to be divine. In theſe two reſpects:

1. In reſpect of the object of it, or matters to be believed, which are divine, and do immediately concern religion, in oppoſition to that which I call a civil and human faith, which is of ſuch things as do not immediately concern God and religion.

2. In reſpect of the divine effects of it, which are to make men religious, and like God. And a faith may as properly be ſaid to be divine, in reſpect of the object of it, as in reſpect of the argument whereby it is wrought; ſo that a faith of the principles of natural religion is as truly divine, though it be not wrought in us by the arguments of divine teſtimony and authority, as a faith of the matters of divine revelation contained in the holy ſcriptures: for why a faith may not as well be ſaid to be divine, for its relation to God as the object of it, as for its relation to the teſtimony of God, as the cauſe of it, I cannot underſtand.

Secondly, The ſecond ſort of faith, which I call divine or religious, is a perſuaſion of things ſupernaturally revealed, of things which are not known by natural light, but by ſome more immediate manifeſtation and diſcovery from God. Thus we find our Saviour, Matth. xvi. 15, 16, 17. oppoſeth divine revelation to the diſcovery of natural reaſon and light. He aſks his diſciples, whom they they believed him to be: Whom ſay ye that I am? And Simon Peter anſwered and ſaid, Thou art the Chriſt, that is, the Meſſias, the Son of the living God. And Jeſus anſwered and ſaid unto him, Bleſſed art thou Simon Bar-jona; for fleſh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee; but my Father which is in heaven; where a revelation or diſcovery from fleſh and blood, is oppoſed to a revelation from God; fleſh and blood being a Hebrew phraſe or manner of ſpeaking, ſignifying a mere man, or ſomething merely human. So we find the phraſe uſed, Eph. vi. 12. We wreſtle not againſt fleſh and blood, but againſt principalities, and powers, and ſpiritual wickedneſs; that is, the enemies we are to contend with are not only men, but devils; and, which is nearer to our purpoſe, Gal. i. 16. where the Apoſtle would expreſs to us, that he received not his commiſſion from men, but immediately from the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, he tells us, that, when it pleaſed God, who ſeparated him from his mother's womb, and called him by his grace, to reveal his Son in him, that he might preach him among the Heathen, immediately he conferred not with fleſh and blood; the word is προσανεθέμην, I did not apply myſelf to fleſh and blood; that is, I did not go to men to receive my commiſſion from them: for ſo he explains it in the next words. Neither went I up to Jeruſalem, to them that were Apoſtles before me; that is, I did not apply myſelf to the Apoſtles, to derive any authority from them to preach the goſpel, becauſe he had no need of that, being called immediately by Chriſt to this work; which words are nothing elſe but a farther explication of what he had ſaid before, verſes 11, 12. I certify you, brethren, that the goſpel which was preached by me, is not after man: for I neither received it of man, neither was taught it, but by the revelation of Jeſus Chriſt. So accordingly here our Saviour tells Peter, that this truth, that Chriſt was the Meſſias, the Son of the living God, was not revealed to him by man, nor by any mere human principle or teſtimony, but by his Father which was in heaven; that is, by the teſtimony which God himſelf gave of him, in the holy and divine goſpel which he taught, and thoſe miracles which he wrought in confirmation of it.

So

So that this kind of faith is a perſuaſion of ſuch things as are not known by natural light, nor diſcovered to us by men, but ſome way or other revealed by God; I ſay, ſome way or other, for the ways of God's revealing and manifeſting himſelf to us are various and arbitrary. God may chuſe what ways he pleaſeth to diſcover himſelf to us by. So the Apoſtle tells us, Heb. i. 1. God, who at ſundry times, and in divers manners, ſpake in times paſt unto the fathers by the prophets. God revealed himſelf at ſeveral times, by ſeveral ſteps and degrees; ſo in various manners; ſometimes by viſions, ſometimes by dreams, ſometimes by oracles, ſometimes by a ſpirit of prophecy, and ſometimes by a voice from heaven, ſometimes by a ſecret and gentle inſpiration. Now, it matters not which of theſe ways God chuſeth to reveal himſelf to us, provided we have ſufficient evidence and grounds of aſſurance that the thing is revealed by God.

As to us, theſe extraordinary ways of revelation are now ceaſed, and we have a fixed and ſtanding revelation, that is, the records of thoſe revelations which God formerly made to holy men; and this is the holy ſcriptures, or the Bible, which is a ſyſtem or collection of things ſupernaturally revealed.

Now, if this faith be conſidered as reſtrained to a part of divine revelation, viz. the doctrine of the goſpel, revealed to the world by Jeſus Chriſt, then it is properly Chriſtian faith, which frequently, in the New Teſtament, is called Faith, κατ' ἐξοχὴν, by way of excellency and eminency, this being the moſt eminent and perfect revelation which God hath made of himſelf to the world, which the Apoſtle, at the beginning of this epiſtle, advanceth above all thoſe former revelations which God had made of himſelf to the fathers, thoſe being by his ſervants and miniſters, prophets and angels: But, in theſe laſt days, God hath revealed himſelf to us by his Son, whom he hath made heir of all things, and advanced to a dignity above that of men or angels.

And with relation to this faith of the goſpel, Chriſtians are peculiarly and eminently called Believers. 1 Theſſ. ii. 10. You know how unblameably we behaved ourſelves among you that believe, that is, among you Chriſtians.

2 Theſſ. i. 10. When he ſhall come to be glorified in his ſaints, and admired in all them that believe, meaning the Chriſtians that entertained the goſpel. And upon the ſame account the Apoſtle calls the whole ſociety, or body of Chriſtians, the Houſehold of Faith, Gal. vi. 10.

But now I am conſidering faith, not in this more narrow and reſtrained ſenſe, for a belief or perſuaſion of the doctrine of the goſpel; but in a more large and comprehenſive ſenſe, for a perſuaſion of all things that are ſupernaturally revealed, that is, of all things contained in the holy ſcriptures.

Now, all the matters of divine revelation, which are contained in the book of holy ſcripture, may, I think, be reduced to one of theſe ſix heads:

1. They are either a hiſtory, or relation of ſome perſon, or matter of fact: and a faith of the hiſtorical part of ſcripture is nothing elſe but a perſuaſion, that thoſe narrations, or relations, are true. Or,

2. A prophecy, or prediction of ſome event. Now, a faith of the prophetical part of ſcripture is a perſuaſion, that the event foretold will certainly come to paſs. Or,

3. A doctrine: ſuch as are all thoſe propoſitions in ſcripture, which declare to us the nature or properties of God, the nature and office of Chriſt, that he is the eternal Son of God, that is, true God, the Meſſias, or Saviour of the world, the King, Prieſt, and Prophet of his church, and the like. Now, a faith of the doctrinal part of ſcripture is a perſuaſion, that thoſe propoſitions, which contain theſe doctrines, are true. Or,

4. Laws for the ordering and governing of our ſpirits and lives, under which I comprehend all the precepts and prohibitions of ſcripture, which are the matter of our duty. Now, a faith of theſe is a perſuaſion, that God hath commanded, and forbidden ſuch things; and, conſequently, that they are neceſſary to be obſerved by us. Or,

5. Promiſes of good things, either with relation to this life, or the other. Now, a faith of the promiſes is a perſuaſion, or a confident expectation that they will be accompliſhed. And thus the Apoſtle deſcribes the faith of the promiſes of another world, at the firſt verſe of this chapter, that it is the ſubſtance of things hoped for, ὑπόϛασις, that is, a confident expectation that the promiſes of the goſpel, which are the matter of our hope, ſhall be accompliſhed; and the evidence of things not ſeen, a being convinced of the certainty and reality of future and inviſible things. And thus likewiſe the Apoſtle explains to us the faith of Abraham, in reference to the promiſes of God, to give him a ſon, Rom. iv. 21. He was fully perſuaded, that what God had promiſed, he was able to perform. Or,

6. Threatenings. Now, a faith of the threatenings is a perſuaſion of the danger we incur, if we neglect our duty: that is, a belief that God juſtly may, and will (having confirmed his threatenings with an oath, which is a ſign of the immutable determination of the divine will) inflict thoſe puniſhments upon us, which he hath threatened, in caſe we diſobey his law. Theſe ſix heads do, I think, contain all, I am ſure, the moſt principal matters of divine revelation; which I have the more carefully diſtinguiſhed, becauſe ſome of them are of a diſtinct and peculiar conſideration from the reſt, as will afterwards appear.

Having thus, as plainly and briefly as I could, opened to you what I mean by this ſecond ſort of divine faith, which is a perſuaſion of things ſupernaturally revealed, I now come to ſatisfy ſuch enquiries about this as may be moſt material. And here I ſhall proceed upon thoſe heads of enquiry which I handled when I ſpake of the firſt ſort of divine faith.

I. Whether this may truly and properly be called faith?

II. What is the argument whereby this faith is wrought?

III. Whether it admit of degrees, and what are the differences of them?

IV. What are the proper and genuine effects of this faith?

V. In what reſpects it may be ſaid to be divine?

I. Whether this may truly and properly be called faith? And that it may, is evident, becauſe the general definition of faith agrees to it: for a man may be perſuaded in his mind concerning things ſupernaturally revealed; and the ſcripture every where calls a perſuaſion of theſe matters

by the name of faith. But, beſides this, it ſeems this is the adequate and only notion of faith, as it hath been fixed by the ſchools, and it is become a term of art. For the definition that the ſchools give of faith is this; that it is an aſſent to a thing credible, as credible. Now, ſay they, that is credible which relies upon the teſtimony of a credible perſon; and, conſequently, a human faith is that which relies upon human teſtimony; and a divine faith, that which relies upon the teſtimony or authority of God: which definition, though it be ſhort and imperfect, (being indeed not a definition of faith in general, but of a particular kind of faith, viz. that which is wrought by the argument which we call teſtimony or authority, and, conſequently, excludes a belief of the principles of natural religion, and a belief that the ſcriptures are the word of God, from being faith), yet this ſhews thus much, that all agree in this, that a perſuaſion of things ſupernaturally revealed is truly and properly faith.

II. What is the argument whereby this faith, or perſuaſion of things ſupernaturally revealed, is wrought in [illegible] us: [illegible] by the general conſent of all, is the teſtimony or authority of God, ſome way or other revealing theſe things to us; whoſe infallible and unerring knowledge, together with his goodneſs and authority, gives us the higheſt aſſurance, that he neither can be deceived himſelf, nor will deceive us in any thing that he reveals to us. I ſay, the teſtimony or authority of God, ſome way or other revealing things to us, is the argument whereby a faith of any ſupernatural revelation is wrought in us: but if we reſtrain all ſupernatural revelations to the Bible, as I told you we know of no other, then the particular kind of teſtimony whereby this faith is wrought in us, is the written word of God.

III. As to the degrees of this faith. Suppoſing men ſufficiently ſatisfied that the ſcriptures are the word of God, that is, a divine revelation; then all thoſe who are ſufficiently ſatisfied of this, do equally believe the things contained in the ſcriptures. For if men be once fully ſatisfied that God hath ſpoken any thing, I think no man makes the leaſt doubt but what God ſays is true. Now, there can be no degrees of faith, where there is no doubt to the contrary; all the degrees that are in faith, arising from a greater or less mixture of doubting. So that those who do not at all doubt but that the scriptures are the word of God, have the same degree of persuasion concerning the matters contained in them: and that no man doubts whether what God says is true, ariseth from the fixed and constant notion which men universally have of God, that he is infallible and true. Therefore we find, Matth. xxi. 25. when our Saviour puts the dilemma to the Pharisees, concerning the baptism of John, Whether it were from heaven, or of men? that they reasoned with themselves, saying, If we shall say, from heaven; he will say unto us, Why did ye not then believe him? Which kind of reasoning imports thus much, that it is universally acknowledged, that no man can in reason make the least doubt of that which he believes to be from God. Therefore, a man would wonder what Becanus the Jesuit meant, unless it were to abuse the Prophets and Apostles, when he says, tom. 3. of his school-divinity, that the Prophets and Apostles had evidentiam revelationis, non autem evidentiam primæ veritatis: tametsi enim evidenter cognoscerent Deum esse, qui ipsis revelabat mysteria fidei, non tamen evidenter cognoscebant Deum esse summe veracem, qui nec falli potuit, nec fallere; that is, "Though it was sufficiently evident to the Pro"phets and Apostles, that those revelations which they "had were from God; yet it was not evident to them,

"that divine revelations are true: for though they did
"evidently know that there was a God, who revealed to "them the mysteries of faith; yet they did not evidently
"know that God was infallible and true, who could nei"ther deceive, nor be deceived." By which he doth not only make the Prophets and Apostles idiots, and destitute of one of the most common notions of human nature, which is, that God is infallible and true; but he doth likewise make all divine revelation useless, and to no purpose. For to what purpose is it for a man to be satisfied, that God reveals such a thing to him, if he be in the mean time unsatisfied, whether what God reveals is true? for no man that is unsatisfied, whether what God reveals be true, can, upon any tolerable ground of reason, yield a firm aſſent to a divine revelation. But it is pity to ſpend time in confuting any thing which confutes itſelf by its own abſurdity, and its direct contradiction to the common notions of human nature. I proceed therefore.

Suppoſing any man be unſatisfied, and do make any doubt whether thoſe books, called the Holy Scriptures, or any of them, be the word of God, that is, a divine revelation; proportionably to the degree of his doubting, concerning the divine authority of the ſcriptures, there will be an abatement of his faith, as to the things contained in them; for he that believes a thing merely upon the credit or teſtimony of ſuch a perſon; ſo much reaſon as he hath to doubt, whether ſuch a perſon did ſpeak, or teſtify ſuch a thing; ſo much reaſon he hath to doubt whether the thing be true.

And upon this account I think it is, that the ſcripture ſpeaks of degrees of faith, of growing and increaſing in faith, of a ſtrong faith, that is, ſuch a faith as was, either wholly or in a great meaſure, free from doubting; and of a weak faith, that is, ſuch a faith as had a great mixture of doubting; by which we are not to underſtand, that they doubted of the truth of any thing of which they were ſatisfied by a divine revelation; but that they doubted whether ſuch things were divine revelations or not. So that the great doubt of the diſciples was, whether Chriſt were the true Meſſias, and really the Son of God: for ſo far as they were ſatisfied of that, they could not doubt of any thing he ſaid.

IV. What are the proper and genuine effects of this faith? The proper and genuine effects of the belief of the ſcriptures, in general, is the conformity of our hearts and lives to what we believe; that is, to be ſuch perſons, and to live ſuch lives, as it becomes thoſe who do heartily believe, and are really perſuaded of the truth of the holy ſcriptures. And, if this be a conſtant and abiding perſuaſion, it will produce this effect; but with more or leſs difficulty, according to the diſpoſition of the ſubject, and the weakneſs or ſtrength of contrary habits and inclinations. More particularly, the effects of this faith are according to the nature of the matter believed. If it be a hiſtory, or relation of things paſt, or of things to come, it hath an effect upon men, ſo far as the hiſtory or prophecy doth concern them. If it be a doctrine, it hath the effect which the particular nature and tendency of ſuch a doctrine requires. For inſtance, the doctrine of God's goodneſs is apt to inflame us with love to him; of his power and juſtice, with a fear and awe of him. This doctrine, that Chriſt is the Saviour of the world, the proper effect of it is to make them rely upon him for ſalvation; and ſo of the reſt. If it be a precept, the proper effect of it is obedience: and hence it is that unbelief and diſobedience are frequently put for one another in ſcripture; and diſobedience is oppoſed to faith, 1 Pet. ii. 7. Unto you therefore which believe, he is precious: but unto them which be diſobedient, &c. where the diſobedient are oppoſed to them that believe. And ſo likewiſe thoſe who neglect any duty of religion, and do any thing notoriouſly unworthy of their profeſſion, are ſaid to deny the faith, 1 Tim. v. 8. But if any provide not for his own, and eſpecially for thoſe of his own houſe, he hath denied the faith. How does he deny the faith? In diſobeying the precepts of the Chriſtian religion, which chargeth us with ſuch natural and moral duties. If it be a promiſe, the proper effect of it is encouragement to obedience by hopes of the thing promiſed. If a threatening, the proper effect of it is to reſtrain men from ſin and diſobedience.

V. In what ſenſe this faith of things ſupernaturally revealed, may be ſaid to be a divine faith? Anſ. Not only in reſpect of the matter and object of it, which are divine things, ſuch as concern God and religion; and in reſpect of the divine effects it hath upon thoſe who believe theſe things; (for in theſe two reſpects a perſuaſion of the principles of natural religion may be ſaid to be a divine faith): but likewiſe in reſpect of the argument whereby it is wrought, which is a divine teſtimony. As for the efficient cauſe, the Spirit of God, that does not immediately belong to this: for the Spirit of God doth not, ſpeaking properly, perſuade us immediately of the truth of things ſupernaturally revealed; but mediately, by perſuading us of the truth of the revelation: for to believe a thing to be true, which we are perſuaded is revealed by God, is ſo natural and conſequent upon ſuch a perſuaſion, that it doth not ſeem to require any new work of the Spirit. And if this be all the work of the Spirit, to perſuade men that ſuch a revelation is divine; it will be moſt proper to ſpeak of this, when I come to the third ſort of faith, which is a perſuaſion of a divine revelation, that it is ſuch: which, becauſe it hath many difficulties in it, deſerves a more large and particular conſideration.

SERMON CCXXI.

Of the faith or perſuaſion of a divine revelation.

HEB xi. 6.

But without faith it is impoſſible to pleaſe God.

The third ſermon on this text.

I Have obſerved that a religious and divine faith comprehends under it three things.

Firſt, A perſuaſion of the principles of natural religion, which are known by the light of nature.

Secondly, A perſuaſion of things ſupernatural and revealed.

Thirdly, A perſuaſion of ſupernatural revelation.

The two former of theſe I have conſidered, and now proceed to the Third ſort of faith, which I call divine or religious; viz. a perſuaſion concerning a divine revelation, that it is ſuch; which I diſtinguiſh from the former thus: The former is a perſuaſion concerning the things which are revealed from God, that they are true: this is a perſuaſion concerning the revelation itſelf, that it is divine and from God.

For

For the opening of this there are many things to be taken into conſideration.

I. What we underſtand by a divine revelation.

II. The ſeveral kinds of it.

III. Whether a perſuaſion concerning a divine revelation be properly faith.

IV. How we may come to be aſſured of a divine revelation, or by what arguments a faith or perſuaſion of a divine revelation is wrought in us.

V. The degrees of this perſuaſion or aſſurance.

VI. The effects of it.

VII. In what ſenſe it may be ſaid to be a divine faith; under which I ſhall ſpeak ſomething concerning the teſtimony of the Spirit.

I. What we are to underſtand by a divine revelation? Anſw. A ſupernatural diſcovery, or manifeſtation of things to us. I ſay ſupernatural, becauſe it may either be immediately by God, or by the mediation of angels; as moſt, if not all the revelations of the Old Teſtament were; a ſupernatural diſcovery, or manifeſtation, either immediately to our minds, and inward faculties; (for I do not ſo well underſtand the diſtinction between underſtanding and imagination, as to be careful to take notice of it); or elſe mediately to our underſtandings, by the mediation of our outward ſenſes, as by an external appearance to our bodily eyes, or by a voice and ſound to the ſenſe of hearing. But of this I have diſcourſed in a former ſermon *, and therefore ſhall add no more here.

II. For the ſeveral kinds of divine revelation; of this alſo I have formerly † diſcourſed at large.

III. Whether a perſuaſion of a divine revelation may properly be called faith? To this I anſwer, that according to the ſtrait and narrow notion of faith, which the ſchools have fixed, which is an aſſent to any thing grounded upon the teſtimony and authority of God revealing it, a perſuaſion of a divine revelation cannot properly be called faith; becauſe it is irrational to expect that a man ſhould have another divine revelation to aſſure him that this is a divine revelation: for then, for the ſame reaſon, I muſt expect another divine revelation to aſſure me of that, and ſo without end. But I have ſufficiently ſhewn, that this is not the true notion of faith in general, but only of a particular kind of faith; viz. that which is wrought by the argument which we call teſtimony or authority. But according to the true and general notion of faith, which is a perſuaſion of the mind concerning any thing, a perſuaſion of the mind concerning a divine revelation, may as properly be called faith, as any thing elſe, if men will but grant, that a man may be ſo ſatisfied, concerning a divine revelation, as verily to believe and be perſuaded that it is ſo.

IV. How we may come to be perſuaded of a divine revelation, that it is ſuch; or by what arguments this perſuaſion is wrought in us? For anſwer to this, it will be requiſite diſtinctly to conſider, Firſt, The perſons to whom a divine revelation is immediately made, what aſſurance they can have of it. And,

Secondly, What aſſurance other perſons can have of it. I ſay, theſe are diſtinctly to be conſidered, becauſe there is a very different account to be given of them.

Firſt, As to thoſe perſons to whom the revelation is immediately made, the queſtion is, By what arguments or means they may come to be aſſured, that any revelation which they have, is really and truly ſuch, and not a deluſion or impoſture? The Jewiſh doctors tell us, that ſome kind of divine revelations do not carry full aſſurance along with them, that they are divine; ſuch are dreams and viſions, as they are diſtinguiſhed from prophecy: and as to that kind of revelation, which they ſtrictly call prophecy, they give ſeveral characteriſtical notes to diſtinguiſh true divine revelation from deluſion; ſuch as theſe; that the ſpirit of deluſion only works on the imagination, and the lower faculties; the divine ſpirit of prophecy upon the underſtanding and reaſonable part of the ſoul: that deluſive inſpirations were accompanied with alienation of mind, which did diſcover itſelf either in rage and fury, or melancholy; but the true prophetical ſpirit is always conſiſtent with the uſe of reaſon and underſtanding. They diſtinguiſh them likewiſe by the manner of their ſeizing

ing upon them; that in the beginning of inſpirations the prophets uſed to have ſome apparition, or to hear ſome voice, either articulate in words, or inarticulate by thunder, or the ſound of a trumpet, which in the Revelations doth frequently precede St John's viſions; and by theſe they were aſſured that they were divine. And laſtly, that a divine inſpiration did always carry along with it a ſtrong evidence of its original, and that, by the vigour and ſtrength of its impreſſion, they were fully aſſured and ſatisfied beyond all doubt and heſitation: thus they. But all that I ſhall ſay, by way of anſwer to this queſtion, ſhall be in theſe two propoſitions:

1. If we believe any ſuch thing as divine revelation, we cannot doubt but thoſe who have it, are ſome way or other fully ſatisfied of it. The reaſon is evident; becauſe otherwiſe it would be in vain, and to no purpoſe, and could not poſſibly attain its end. A divine revelation cannot poſſibly ſignify any thing, or in reaſon have any effect upon a man, unleſs he be ſatisfied it is ſuch: for ſo long as he does not know but that it is a deluſion, he will not attend to it, or regard it. So that the diſtinction of the Jewiſh doctors between dreams and viſions, and prophecy, that this carries always full aſſurance with it, the other not, is vain and unreaſonable.

2. The means whereby this aſſurance of a divine revelation is wrought, is moſt probably the evidence it carries along with it, whereby it did fully ſatisfy the perſon that had it of its divine original. That God can accompany his own revelations with ſuch a clear and overpowering light as ſhall diſcover to us the divinity of them, and ſatisfy us beyond all doubt and ſcruple, I think no man can doubt, that conſiders the vaſt power and influence which he muſt needs have over our underſtandings, who made them, and knows the frame of them: and if this be granted, it is not neceſſary to explain the particular way how it is done, it being a thing not to be expreſſed in words, but to be felt and experienced. So that the argument whereby this perſuaſion of a divine revelation is wrought in thoſe that have it, is inward experience of the full ſatisfaction and aſſurance, which they find to be ſupernaturally wrought in them, that is, of which they can give no account from themſelves. And this is not a ſtubborn belief, and an obſtinate conceit of a thing: but a good man, who is inſpired, when he reflects upon himſelf, and this aſſurance which he finds in himſelf, he can give a rational account of it to himſelf. Thus he finds that it is a foreign impreſſion, and doth not ſpring from himſelf, nor hath its riſe from thence; therefore he aſcribes it to ſome ſpirit without himſelf; and he believes that there is a God that can communicate himſelf to the minds and ſpirits of men; and that his goodneſs is ſuch, that he will not ſuffer them to be under a neceſſity of deluſion, which they muſt be, if when they have the higheſt aſſurance and ſatisfaction, that ſuch a thing is a divine revelation, they may be deceived. And then likewiſe he conſiders the matter of the revelation, which if it do not contradict any eſſential and neceſſary fundamental notion of his underſtanding, he thinks himſelf bound to entertain it upon this aſſurance.

I ſay, good men may give themſelves this rational ſatisfaction; for I grant a wicked man, that rejects and diſobeys the truth of God, may ſo provoke him, as to give him up to ſtrong deluſions, to believe lies; and he may be as confident of a lie, as a good man is of truth. But as this is not unjuſt from God in reference to the perſons, ſo it is no prejudice to the aſſurance which good men may have of divine revelation.

And this aſſurance is ſuch, as it is not in the power of any evil ſpirit to convey to us, concerning a deluſion; or if it be in his power, he is not permitted to do it to any who have not highly provoked God, by rejecting the truth, to give them up to ſtrong deluſions, to believe lies: and that ſuch perſons ſhould be obnoxious to ſuch deluſions, as it is not unjuſt in reference to them, ſo neither is it any prejudice to the aſſurance which good men have of ſuch revelations, which are truly and really divine.

But for the other ways of diſcerning true revelation from falſe, which the Jews mention; as that the Spirit of God always works upon the underſtanding, as well as the imagination, and in conſequence with the uſe of reaſon and underſtanding, and gives ſome ſenſible notice tice of its ſeizing upon men, I think all theſe to be uncertain, if they be examined. And if the laſt which they mention, viz. this that I have inſiſted upon, be true, all the other are ſuperfluous. For what need any other ſign to aſſure a man that that is a divine revelation which carries along with it clear ſatisfaction and full aſſurance that it is ſuch?

So that it remains now, that we fix upon ſome particular ways, whereby the perſon that hath a divine revelation, may be aſſured of it; and this I ſhall do by theſe propoſitions.

Firſt, That God can work in the mind of man a firm perſuaſion of a thing, by giving him a clear and vigorous perception of it; and if ſo, then God can accompany his own revelations with ſuch a clear and overpowering light, as ſhall diſcover to us the divinity of them, and ſatisfy us thereof beyond all doubt and ſcruple. And this no man can doubt of, that conſiders the vaſt power and influence which God, who made the ſoul of man, and perfectly knows the frame of it, muſt needs have upon the mind and underſtanding of man.

Secondly, God never perſuades a man of any thing that contradicts the natural and eſſential notions of his mind and underſtanding. For this would be to deſtroy his own workmanſhip, and to impoſe that upon the underſtanding of a man, which, whilſt it retains its own nature, and remains what it is, it cannot poſſibly admit. For inſtance, we cannot imagine that God can perſuade any man that there is no God; for he that believes any thing as from God, muſt neceſſarily believe there is a God; therefore it is impoſſible that he can be perſuaded of this as from God, that there is no God; and that he is not wiſe, and juſt, and good, and powerful; and that he is not to be honoured and loved by all reaſonable creatures: becauſe theſe do clearly and immediately contradict the moſt eſſential and fundamental notions of our minds concerning God, and the reſpect which is due to him: not only becauſe it is unworthy of God to go about to perſuade a man of a falſehood; but becauſe it is impoſſible, in the nature of the thing, that the mind of man, which is naturally prepoſſeſſed prepoſſeſſed with contrary notions, ſhould, whilſt it retains its own nature, admit of ſuch as do clearly and immediately contradict them. For if theſe be natural notions, that there is a God, that he muſt be wiſe, and juſt, and good, and powerful, and ought to be honoured and loved by his creatures; the mind of man cannot poſſibly admit of any contrary perſuaſions and impreſſions; for the former perſuaſions being natural, to us, will always remain while our nature remains, and if any perſuaſions contrary to theſe could be wrought upon our minds, they would ſignify nothing, but would mutually deſtroy one another. For if any man that is perſuaded that God is good, (as every man is, that is perſuaded he is at all) could, during the perſuaſion, be likewiſe of a contrary perſuaſion, that he is not good; this latter perſuaſion would ſignify nothing: for he is not perſuaded that God is not good, whilſt he retains this perſuaſion that he is good.

Thirdly, Suppoſing the thing revealed do not contradict the eſſential notions of our minds, no good and holy man hath reaſon to doubt of any thing, whether it be a revelation from God or not, of which he hath a clear and vigorous perception, and full ſatisfaction in his own mind that it is ſuch. For if a man may have reaſon to doubt of any thing whereof he hath a clear perception, then no man can be certain of any thing. Now, that there is ſuch a thing as certainty, is now ſuppoſed, and not to be proved. I ſay, a good and holy man can have no reaſon to doubt: for a wicked man, I grant, may, by a ſinful rejection of, and diſobedience to the truth, ſo far provoke God, as to give him up to ſtrong deluſions, to believe lies; and he may be as confident of a lie, as any good man is of the truth.

And as this is not unjuſt from God, in reference to wicked men, ſo it is no prejudice to the aſſurance which good men may have concerning a divine revelation.

Fourthly, A good and holy man reflecting upon this aſſurance and perſuaſion that he hath, may be able to give himſelf a reaſonable account of it, and ſatisfy himſelf that it is not a ſtubborn belief, and an obſtinate conceit of things without any ground or reaſon. A good man is ſecretly, and within himſelf, perſuaded, that that God hath revealed to him ſuch a thing: reflecting upon this perſuaſion, he finds that it is a foreign impreſſion, and doth not ſpring from his own mind. Now, he believing that there is a God, who can, and probably doth communicate and reveal himſelf to the minds of good men; and being withal ſatisfied that his goodneſs is ſuch, that he will not ſuffer good men, who do heartily and ſincerely deſire to know his will, to be under a neceſſity of deluſion (which they unavoidably are, if they may then be deceived, when they have the greateſt aſſurance, and cleareſt ſatisfaction that ſuch a thing is revealed to them of God); from hence he reaſonably concludes, that he ought not to queſtion the matter any further. I might inſtance in the revelation made to Abraham, concerning the ſacrificing of his ſon, which hath the greateſt difficulty in it of any caſe I know of: but of that I have elſewhere diſcourſed at large ‡. Thus much for the firſt.

Secondly, What aſſurance can other perſons, who have not the revelation immediately made to them, have of a divine revelation? To this I ſhall anſwer by theſe propoſitions:

1. That there are ſome means whereby a man may be aſſured of another's revelation that it is divine. For,

(1.) Otherwiſe it would ſignify nothing, but only to the perſon that immediately had it; which would make void the chief end of moſt revelations, which are ſeldom made to particular perſons for their own ſakes only, but for the moſt part, on purpoſe that they may be made known to others; which could not effectually be done, unleſs there be ſome means whereby men may be aſſured of revelations made to another.

(2.) None could be guilty of unbelief but thoſe who had immediate revelation made to them. For no man is guilty of unbelief that is not obliged to believe: but no man can be under an obligation to believe any thing, who hath not ſufficient means whereby he may be aſſured that ſuch a thing is true.

2. The private aſſurance and ſatisfaction of another concerning a revelation made to him, can ſignify nothing at all to me, to aſſure me of it. For what ſatiſ-

faction is it to me, that another may ſay he hath a revelation, unleſs I have ſome means to be aſſured that what he ſays is true? For if I muſt believe every ſpirit, that is, every man that ſays he is inſpired, I lie open to all poſſible impoſtures and deluſions, and muſt believe every one that either fooliſhly conceits, or falſely pretends that he hath a revelation: for both the conceited and pretended enthuſiaſt will ſay they have revelations, with as much confidence as thoſe who are truly and divinely inſpired: and to take every man's word in matters of ſuch huge conſequence and importance as revelation from God ought to be preſumed to be, would not be faith, but credulity, that is, an ungrounded perſuaſion; which how ſeverely God puniſhed, you may ſee in that famous inſtance, 1 Kings xiii. where the prophet that was ſent to Bethel, is upon his return torn in pieces by a lion, becauſe of his credulity and eaſy belief of a pretended revelation. I confeſs this caſe is ſomewhat different from theirs, who ſimply believe a pretended revelation, as being complicated with ſome other aggravating circumſtances. For he had an immediate revelation from God, not to eat, nor drink at Bethel; nor to return the ſame way that he came: upon his return, an old prophet meets him, and tells him, that an angel had appeared to him, and had bid him to bring him back, and to cauſe him to eat and drink; he believes him, and turns in with him. Now, this was the aggravation of his incredulity, that when he himſelf had had an expreſs revelation from God, concerning which he was ſatisfied, he hearkened to the pretended revelation of another, concerning which he had no aſſurance, in contradiction to a divine revelation, which he knew to be ſuch. Not but that the command which God had given him was, in its own nature, revocable, and God might have countermanded it by another immediate revelation to him, or by an equivalent, that is, a miracle wrought by the prophet, who pretended to countermand it from God. Unumquodque diſſolvitur eo modo quo ligatur; the obligation which was brought upon him by an immediate revelation, could not be diſſolved but by another immediate revelation, or evidence equivalent to it. However, this

inſtance ſerves in the general to my purpoſe, that a man may be faulty by credulity, as well as by unbelief; and as a man ought not to diſbelieve, where there is ſufficient evidence; ſo neither ought he to believe any thing without ſufficient grounds of aſſurance.

3. That miracles wrought for the confirmation of any divine teſtimony or revelation made to another, are a ſufficient means, whereby thoſe who have not the divine revelation immediately made to them, may be aſſured that it is divine; I ſay, theſe are ſufficient means of aſſurance in this caſe. I do not ſay they are the only means (for it does not become men to limit the power aud wiſdom of God); but I do not know of any other means of aſſurance, upon which men can ſecurely rely; and it is a great preſumption that this is the beſt and fitteſt, if not the only means, becauſe the wiſdom of God hath always pitched upon it, and conſtantly made uſe of it, and no other. Under miracles I comprehend the prediction of future events, which God claims as a peculiar prerogative to himſelf, becauſe ſuch things are out of the reach of any created underſtanding; and therefore in the prophet Iſaiah, he challengeth the idols of the Heathens to give this teſtimony, or argument of their divinity; Shew us things that are to come, that we may know that ye are gods.

But here we muſt diſtinguiſh between doubtful and unqueſtionable miracles. I call thoſe doubtful miracles, which, though a man cannot tell how they can be done by any natural power, yet do not carry that full conviction with them, as to be univerſally owned and acknowledged for arguments of a divine power. Such were thoſe which the magicians did by their inchantments. I call thoſe unqueſtionable, which, conſidering their quality and number, and the publick manner of doing them, are out of all queſtion. Such were the miracles of Moſes and our Saviour. Now, a doubtful, and a ſingle, and a private wonder, or miracle, as I may call it, can give no confirmation to any thing in oppoſition to a revelation or a doctrine confirmed by many, and public, and unqueſtionable miracles. Upon this account Moſes forbids the children of Iſrael to hearken to any prophet that ſhould come to ſeduce them to idolatry;

latry; yea, though he ſhould give a ſign or wonder, and the ſign or wonder ſhould come to paſs, Deut. xiii. 1, 2, 3, 4. Now, here lies the ſtrength of the reaſon, becauſe he hath ſpoken to turn you away from the Lord your God, which brought you out of the land of Egypt, and redeemed you out of the houſe of bondage; that is, becauſe he contradicts the great revelation which God made of himſelf, and confirmed by ſuch a ſucceſſion of ſo many, and ſo great miracles; the credit of which revelation ought not in reaſon to be called in queſtion upon the working of a ſingle and a private wonder, which we could not diſtinguiſh from a miracle. Upon the ſame account, St Paul, Gal. i. 8. ſays, Though an angel from heaven ſhould preach any other doctrine than that which had been preached unto them, he ſhould be accurſed; that is, after ſo clear and great confirmation, as was given to the goſpel, a contrary doctrine, though it ſhould come from an angel, ſhould be rejected as execrable.

But you will ſay, Suppoſe ſuch a prophet as Moſes ſpeaks of here, ſuch an angel as St Paul mentions, ſhould work as many and as great miracles as Moſes and Chriſt wrought, ſhould we then believe them?

I anſwer, This is not to be ſuppoſed: for ſuppoſing the providence of God in the world, it cannot be imagined that an equal atteſtation ſhould be given to a falſe doctrine and a true. But that the greateſt and moſt unqueſtionable miracles are to carry it, is evident; becauſe this is all the reaſon why Moſes was to be credited above the magicians, becauſe he wrought more and greater wonders than they did. But if it could be ſuppoſed that any one could work as great miracles for the confirmation of idolatry, as were wrought by way of atteſtation to the true worſhip of God, then there would be no difference, but what the reaſon of the thing makes; the belief of one God being more reaſonable than many; and not to make an image or ſenſible repreſentation of a ſpirit, being more reaſonable than to make one. But if this could be ſuppoſed, the natural iſſue and conſequence of it would be atheiſm, a man would believe neither that nor the other, nor that there is any God at all.

But

But a farther account of the nature and difference of miracles, I reſerve to ſome * particular diſcourſes on that ſubject. At preſent, for the fuller opening of this matter, it will be proper to ſhew,

1. That the divine authority both of the doctrine of Moſes and Chriſt is reſolved into miracles.

2. What aſſurance of miracles is ſufficient to perſuade men to believe that teſtimony, for the confirmation of which they are wrought.

3. What aſſurance they give us, that the ſcriptures are a divine revelation.

But the conſideration of theſe I refer to the next opportunity.

SERMON CCXXII.

Of the faith or perſuaſion of a divine revelation.

HEB. xi. 6.

But without faith it is impoſſible to pleaſe God.

The fourth ſermon on this text.

IN diſcourſing of the faith or perſuaſion of a divine revelation, I propoſed the conſidering theſe ſeven things.

I. What we underſtand by a divine revelation.

II. The ſeveral kinds of it.

III. Whether a perſuaſion concerning a divine revelation be properly faith.

IV. How we may come to be aſſured of a divine revelation; or by what arguments a faith or perſuaſion of a divine revelation is wrought in us.

* See ſermons on Heb. ii. 4. in this volume.

V. The degrees of this perſuaſion or aſſurance.
VI. The effects of it.
VII. In what ſenſe it may be ſaid to be a divine faith.

I was upon the fourth of theſe, viz. conſidering by what arguments a faith or perſuaſion of a divine revelation is wrought in us; which led me to conſider the evidence of miracles; and I propoſed to ſhew particularly theſe three things.

1. That the divine authority both of the doctrine of Moſes and Chriſt is reſolved into miracles.

2. What aſſurance of miracles is ſufficient to perſuade men to believe that teſtimony, for the confirmation of which they are wrought.

3. What aſſurance they give us, that the ſcriptures are a divine revelation.

I proceed to treat of theſe in their order.

1. I ſhall ſhew that the divine authority both of the doctrine of Moſes and of Chriſt is reſolved into miracles. We find the ſcripture lays the whole weight of the divine authority both of the law and goſpel, of the revelation of the Old and New Teſtament, upon this evidence. Exod. iv. 1, 2, 3. When God ſends Moſes, he objects, That they will not believe him, nor hearken to him, but will ſay, The Lord hath not appeared unto him. Thereupon God gives him a power of miracles, that they may believe that the Lord God of their fathers, the God of Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob, had appeared unto them: and by the evidence of thoſe miracles which he wrought, he prevailed over the magicians. And generally, throughout the ſtory of the Old Teſtament, we find all perſons yielding to the evidence of miracles, as a ſufficient atteſtation to a prophet and his meſſage. When Elijah had prevailed with God in a miraculous manner to confirm his own worſhip, and confute the worſhip of Baal, by ſending fire from heaven to conſume the ſacrifice, the people yield to this evidence, and cry out, The Lord he is God, the Lord he is God, 1 Kings xviii. 39. When Elijah raiſed the woman's ſon, then ſhe owned him for a prophet, 1 Kings xvii. 24. Now by this I know that thou art a man of God, and that the word of the Lord in thy mouth is true. So likewiſe Naaman was convinced by the miraculous raculous cure which the Prophet Eliſha wrought on him, 2 Kings v. 15. Behold! now I know that there is no God in all the earth but in Iſrael.

And ſo likewiſe the divinity of our Saviour and his doctrine is reſolved into the evidence of his miracles. This is the evidence Chriſt gives of himſelf, when John ſent his diſciples to enquire whether he was the Meſſias, Matth. xi. 2. &c. Now when John had heard in the priſon the works of Chriſt, he ſent two of his diſciples, and ſaid unto him, Art thou he that ſhould come, or do we look for another? Jeſus anſwered and ſaid unto them, Go and ſhew John again thoſe things which ye do hear and ſee: The blind receive their ſight, and the lame walk, the lepers are cleanſed, and the deaf hear, the dead are raiſed up, and the poor have the goſpel preached unto them. And bleſſed is he whoſoever ſhall not be offended in me. So John v. 36. But I have greater witneſs than that of John: for the works which the Father hath given me to finiſh, the ſame works that I do, bear witneſs of me, that the Father hath ſent me. Chap. x. 25. Jeſus anſwered them, I told you, and ye believed not: the works that I do in my Father's name, they bear witneſs of me. Verſe 37, 38. If I do not the works of my Father, believe me not: but if I do, though ye believe not me, believe the works; that ye may know and believe that the Father is in me, and I in him. Chap. xiv. 11. Believe me, that I am in the Father, and the Father in me; or elſe believe me for the very works ſake. Chap. xx. 30, 31. And many other ſigns truly did Jeſus in the preſence of his diſciples, which are not written in this book. But theſe are written, that ye might believe that Jeſus is the Chriſt, the Son of God, and that believing, ye might have life through his name. And from hence our Saviour aggravates the unbelief and impenitency of the Jews, becauſe they reſiſted this higheſt evidence, Matth. xi. 20, 21, 22, 23, 24. Then began he to upbraid the cities wherein moſt of his mighty works were done, becauſe they repented not. Wo unto thee, Chorazin, wo unto thee, Bethſaida: for if the mighty works which were done in you, had been done in Tyre and Sidon, they would have repented long ago in ſackcloth and aſhes. But I ſay unto you, It ſhall be more tolerable for Tyre and Sidon, at the day of judgment, than for you. And thou Capernaum, which art exalted unto heaven, ſhalt be brought down to hell: for if the mighty works which have been done in thee, had been done in Sodom, it would have remained until this day. But I ſay unto you, that it ſhall be more tolerable for the land of Sodom in the day of judgment, than for thee. John xv. 24. If I had not done among them the works which none other man did, they had not had ſin; but now have they both ſeen, and hated both me and my Father. And ſo the Apoſtle tells us, that miracles are the great confirmation of the goſpel, and are ſo clear an evidence of the truth of it, that they render all unbelievers inexcuſable: Heb. ii. 2, 3. For if the word ſpoken by angels was ſtedfaſt, and every tranſgreſſion and diſobedience received a juſt recompence of reward; how ſhall we eſcape, if we neglect ſo great ſalvation, which at the firſt began to be ſpoken by the Lord, and was confirmed unto us by them that heard him?

In particular, the great weight of the goſpel is laid upon the miracle of Chriſt's reſurrection from the dead, which our Saviour mentions as the only ſign that ſhould be given to that generation, that is the cleareſt. And the Apoſtle, Rom. i. 4. ſaith, that he was declared to be the Son of God with power, according to the Spirit of holineſs, by the reſurrection from the dead. This put it out of all queſtion. And St Paul, in his ſermon to the Athenians, Acts xvii. 30, 31. inſiſts upon this as the great evidence: And the times of their ignorance God winked at; but now commandeth all men every where to repent: becauſe he hath appointed a day in which he will judge the world in righteouſneſs, by that man whom he hath ordained, whereof he hath given aſſurance unto all men, in that he hath raiſed him from the dead. And this was the proper work of the apoſtles, to be witneſſes to the world of this great miracle, Acts i. 21, 22. Wherefore of theſe men which have companied with us all the time that the Lord Jeſus went in and out among us, beginning from the baptiſm of John, unto that ſame day that he was taken up from us, muſt one be ordained to be a witneſs with us of his reſurrection. So St Peter, in his ſermon, Acts ii. 32. Him hath God raiſed up, whereof we all are witneſſes.

And,

And, to mention no more, Acts x. 38, 39, 40, 41. God anointed Jesus of Nazareth with the Holy Ghost, and with power; who went about doing good, and healing all that were oppressed of the devil: for God was with him. And we are witnesses of all things which he did, both in the land of the Jews, and in Jerusalem; whom they slew and hanged on a tree: Him God raised up the third day, and shewed him openly; not to all the people, but unto witnesses chosen before of God, even to us, who did eat and drink with him after he rose from the dead.

2. What assurance of miracles is sufficient to persuade men to believe the revelation or testimony, for the confirmation of which they are wrought. Of this assurance there are three degrees, all which do oblige men to believe the divine revelation for which they are wrought.

(1.) If we have the evidence of our own senses for it, that is, if we see them wrought. This evidence the disciples of our Lord had, and the Jews, and therefore their unbelief was inexcusable; and the blaspheming the Spirit whereby they saw such miracles to be wrought, was the sin against the Holy Ghost.

(2.) If we have the credible report of eye-witnesses of those miracles, who are credible persons, and we have no reason to doubt of their testimony; that is, if we have the reports of them immediately from the mouth of those who were eye-witnesses of them. That this lays likewise an obligation on men to believe, appears by our Saviour's reproof of Thomas, who would not believe except he himself saw: but most expresly from that text, Mark xvi. 14. He upbraided them with their unbelief and hardness of heart, because they believed not them which had seen him after he was risen.

(3.) If the credible report of eye-witnesses concerning such miracles be conveyed to us in such a manner, and with so much evidence, as we have no reason to doubt of it. For why should we not believe a credible report conveyed to us in such a manner, as we have no reason to question, but that it hath been faithfully conveyed and transmitted to us? St John thought this to be assurance sufficient to induce belief, John xx. 31. But these things were written that ye might believe, &c. And this is that aſſurance which we, who live at this diſtance from the age of Chriſt and his apoſtles, have of the miracles wrought in confirmation of the goſpel. I ſhall have occaſion to enlarge upon theſe heads hereafter.

3. What aſſurance miracles give us, that the ſcriptures are a divine revelation. And this contains four diſtinct queſtions in it.

1. What aſſurance we have from hence, that the doctrine contained in the ſcripture is from God? To which the anſwer is eaſy; becauſe theſe miracles were wrought for the confirmation of this doctrine.

2. The queſtion is, What aſſurance miracles give us that thoſe perſons who are ſaid to be the penmen of the ſeveral books of ſcripture, were really ſo? To this I anſwer, none at all: for I do not know of any miracle that was wrought to prove Moſes wrote the Pentateuch, or that St Matthew wrote the goſpel which goes under his name. But if the queſtion be, How then am I aſſured of this? I anſwer, by credible and uncontrolled report. It bears his name, and hath always been received for his; and if this will not ſatisfy, I cannot prove it farther; it is too late now to prove it by any other argument. St Matthew is dead, and thoſe who ſaw him write it, and thoſe who received it from them; ſo that we cannot go to enquire of them in order to our ſatisfaction: but the beſt of it is, that as it cannot now be proved at this diſtance otherwiſe than by conſtant uncontrolled report, ſo no man, at this diſtance, can have any reaſon to doubt of it; and ſo long as no man can have any reaſon to doubt of it, there can be no need of proving it, eſpecially conſidering, that it is by no means neceſſary to ſalvation, to believe that St Matthew wrote the hiſtory of the goſpel, but only to believe what he wrote.

3. The queſtion is, What aſſurance miracles give, that thoſe perſons who are ſaid to be the penmen of the books of ſcriprure were divinely inſpired? The miracles (under which I comprehend the prediction of future events) which Moſes, and the prophets, and the apoſtles wrought, were teſtimonies from heaven, that they were divine perſons, and that what they ſaid was to be credited; and, conſequently, conſequently, if they gave out themſelves for ſuch, that they were ſuch. That the penmen of the New Teſtament were perſons endowed with a miraculous power, is plain, becauſe they were moſt of them apoſtles: and for the reſt, we have no reaſon to doubt of it; thoſe extraordinary gifts being ſo common in the primitive times: however, ſo long as there is nothing in the reſt, that is diſſonant from, or contrary to, what thoſe wrote, of whoſe inſpirations we are aſſured, and theſe their writings have always been received in the church as of divine inſpiration, which we may well preſume was not raſhly done, and without grounds, we have no reaſon to doubt as to them: or if there were, ſo long as they contain nothing that is contrary to thoſe who were unqueſtionably inſpired, the matter is of no dangerous conſequence. And as for the penmen of the Old Teſtament, we are aſſured that they were all inſpired, by one in the New Teſtament, that was unqueſtionably ſo, St Paul, who tells us that all ſcripture is of divine inſpiration, meaning the books of the Old Teſtament which were called by that name, κατ' ἐξοχὴν, or by way of eminency.

But if any one enquire farther, how far the penmen of ſcripture were inſpired in the writing of thoſe books? whether only ſo far as to be ſecured from miſtake in the delivery of any meſſage or doctrine from God, or in the relation of any hiſtory, or matter of fact; yet ſo, as they were left every man to his own ſtyle and manner of expreſſion? or that every thing they wrote, was immediately dictated to them, and that not only the ſenſe of it, but the very words and phraſes by which they expreſs things, and that they were merely inſtruments or penmen, I ſhall not take upon me to determine; I ſhall only ſay this in general, that conſidering the end of this inſpiration, which was to inform the world certainly of the mind and will of God, it is neceſſary for every man to believe that the inſpired penmen of ſcripture were ſo far aſſiſted as was neceſſary to this end: and he that thinks upon good grounds that this end cannot be ſecured, unleſs every word and ſyllable were immediately dictated, he hath reaſon to believe it was ſo; but if any man, upon good grounds, thinks the end of writing the ſcripture may be ſufficiently ſecured without that, he hath no reaſon to conclude, that God, who is not wanting in what is neceſſary, is guilty of doing what is ſuperfluous. And if any man is of opinion that Moſes might write the hiſtory of thoſe actions which he himſelf did or was preſent at, without an immediate revelation of them; or that Solomon, by his natural and acquired wiſdom might ſpeak thoſe wiſe ſayings which are in his Proverbs; or the evangeliſts might write what they heard and ſaw, or what they had good aſſurance of from others, as St Luke tells he did; or that St Paul might write for his cloak and parchments at Troas, and ſalute by name his friends and brethren, or that he might adviſe Timothy to drink a little wine, &c. without the immediate dictate of the Spirit of God, he ſeems to have reaſon on his ſide. For that men may, without an immediate revelation, write thoſe things which they think, without a revelation, ſeems very plain. And that they did ſo, there is this probable argument for it, becauſe we find that the evangeliſts, in relating the diſcourſes of Chriſt, are very far from agreeing in the particular expreſſions and words, though they do agree in the ſubſtance of the diſcourſes: but if the words had been dictated by the Spirit of God, they muſt have agreed in them. For when St Luke differs from St Matthew, in relating what our Saviour ſaid, it is impoſſible that they ſhould both relate it right as to the very words and forms of expreſſion; but they both relate the ſubſtance of what he ſaid. And if it had been of concernment, that every thing that they wrote ſhould be dictated ad apicem, to a tittle, by the Spirit of God, it is of the ſame concernment ſtill, that the providence of God ſhould have ſecured the ſcriptures ſince, to a tittle, from the leaſt alteration: which, that it is not done, appears by the various readings both of the Old and New Teſtament, concerning which, no man can infallibly ſay, that this is right, and not the other. It ſeems ſufficient, in this matter to aſſert, that the Spirit of God did reveal to the penmen of the ſcriptures what was neceſſary to be revealed: and as to all other things, that he did ſuperintend them in the writing of it, ſo far as to ſecure them from any material error or miſtake in what they have delivered. Or,

4. If

4. If the queſtion be, what aſſurance we have from miracles, that all thoſe books which we receive are canonical? To this I anſwer, I do not know of any miracle that ever was wrought on purpoſe to confirm the canon of the ſcriptures: but as for the books of the Old Teſtament, we have ſufficient aſſurance, that thoſe which we now receive, are thoſe which the Jews received for ſuch in our Saviour's time; and he doth not any where find fault with any of them as not canonical, which we have no reaſon to doubt but he would have done, if any one of them had been otherwiſe. And that theſe are the ſame the Jews then received, appears ſufficiently, becauſe both Jews and Chriſtians, to this day, agree in them. As for the books of the New Teſtament, we are ſufficiently aſſured, that theſe, and no other, are the books which the ancient church received for canonical and of divine authority; and though ſome of them were, for a time, controverted, yet, upon further enquiry and examination, they were received.

V. Whether this faith concerning a divine revelation made to others, do admit of degrees? That it doth, is evident from theſe expreſſions which the ſcripture uſeth, of increaſing faith, of growing in it, of a weak and ſtrong faith, all which plainly ſuppoſe degrees. And that theſe degrees of faith which the ſcripture ſpeaks of, are to be underſtood of a higher and lower degree of aſſurance concerning a divine revelation as ſuch, and concerning the things revealed, I ſhewed before. For all the doubts which the diſciples had concerning what our Saviour taught, did reſolve itſelf into this, Whether he was the Meſſias, and ſent by God to teach thoſe things; which, had they been fully ſatisfied of, they could have made no doubt of any thing that he taught.

And here it will be proper to enquire, what is the higheſt degree of aſſurance which we can have concerning a divine revelation made to another, that it is ſuch; whether it be an infallible aſſurance, or only an undoubted certainty. The difference between them is this; an infallible aſſurance is ſuch as excludes all poſſibility of error and miſtake; an undoubted certainty doth not exclude all poſſibility of miſtake, but only all juſt and reaſonable ſonable cauſe why a prudent and conſiderate man ſhould doubt. And the reaſon why I make this enquiry is, in order to be ſatisfied of a clear and firm way for the reſolution of our faith againſt the Papiſts, who ſay it is impoſſible for us to give any ſatisfactory account of our faith, becauſe we do finally reſolve it into fallible grounds, and, conſequently, our faith muſt be fallible, and, conſequently, cannot be divine, becauſe all divine faith is infallible: for, ſay they, when we enquire why you believe the doctrines of the Chriſtian religion; you ſay, upon divine authority, or the revelation of God in ſcripture. This is granted to be an infallible ground, if we can be infallibly aſſured that the ſcriptures are a divine revelation; therefore they enquire, in the ſecond place, Why do you believe the ſcriptures to be a divine revelation? we ſay, becauſe the perſons who delivered the doctrines contained in them, had the greateſt atteſtation from God, that they were employed by him, to reveal and make known his mind; and this atteſtation was miracles. But then they aſk, What aſſurance have you that ſuch miracles were wrought? Have you an infallible aſſurance, or not? If not, then it cannot be a ſufficient ground for a divine faith, which is always infallible. In oppoſition therefore to them, I ſhall not now attempt to ſhew the inſufficiency of their way of reſolving faith; but vindicate ours as ſufficient, by laying down and proving, if I can, theſe propoſitions.

1. That infallibility is not eſſential to divine faith, and neceſſarily included in the notion of it; which I prove thus. Divine faith admits of degrees, as I have ſhewed before: but there can be no degrees of infallibility. Infallibility is an impoſſibility of being deceived; but there are no degrees of impoſſibility, one thing is not more impoſſible than another; but all things that are impoſſible, are equally ſo.

2. That the aſſurance which we have of the miracles wrought for the confirmation of the goſpel, is not infallible aſſurance. I ſhewed before that there are three ways whereby we may be aſſured of matter of fact, ſuch as the working of miracles is.

Firſt, By our own ſenſes,

Secondly,

Secondly, By the report of credible witneſſes.

Thirdly, By credible hiſtory. But none of theſe ways give us infallible aſſurance. That it is poſſible our ſenſes may deceive us, I think no body will deny; and if ſo, then the teſtimony of witneſſes, and the report of hiſtory, which likewiſe depends originally upon our ſenſes, may deceive us. I do not know a fourth way whereby we may be aſſured of matter of fact.

3. That an undoubted aſſurance of a divine revelation, that it is ſuch, is as much as in reaſon can be expected. I deny not but that a divine revelation is an infallible ground of faith; becauſe whatever God ſays is infallibly true, and a faith built upon a divine revelation would be infallible, if we could be infallibly aſſured that it is a divine revelation; but that we cannot be without another divine revelation to aſſure us infallibly that this is one, and that other would require a third, and ſo without end; which being abſurd and unreaſonable, it remains, that an infallible aſſurance of a divine revelation is impoſſible; and, conſequently, that we can have no more than an undoubted aſſurance; and this is as much as in reaſon we can expect to have: for it is unreaſonable to expect that we ſhould have any greater aſſurance that ſuch a revelation is from God, than we have that there is a God; becauſe that there is a God, is the firſt and moſt fundamental principle of religion, and it is unreaſonable to expect greater aſſurance of any thing in religion, than we have of that which is the firſt principle of it. And, indeed, it is impoſſible; for no man can be infallibly aſſured, that a revelation is from God, unleſs he be firſt infallibly aſſured that there is a God, but no man hath more than undoubted aſſurance that there is a God. No man pretends to a divine revelation that there is a God; but only to have rational ſatisfaction of it, ſuch as leaves no juſt or reaſonable cauſe to doubt of it. And why then ſhould any deſire greater aſſurance of a divine revelation, than he hath of God?

4. An undoubted aſſurance is ſufficient to conſtitute a divine faith. Mark xvi. 14. it is ſaid, Chriſt upbraided his diſciples with their unbelief, becauſe they believed not them who had ſeen him after he was riſen. Suppoſe now the diſciples had believed, which they ought to have done, this faith of theirs would have been a truly divine faith; but by no means infallible. For that cannot be an infallible faith which is built but upon fallible grounds: now, the ground upon which they ought to have believed, was the report of credible witneſſes; but the report of credible witneſſes is by no means infallible; it is indeed undoubted, for I have no reaſon to doubt of a credible report; for that is credible which I have juſt cauſe to believe; but I can have no juſt cauſe to doubt of that which I have juſt cauſe to believe.

As an undoubted aſſurance is ſufficient to conſtitute a divine faith, ſo it is ſufficient to all the ends and purpoſes of a divine faith. To inſtance in the faith of the promiſes of eternal life: What is the end and deſign of this faith, but to encourage our obedience, and make us continue in it, notwithſtanding the hazard of any thing in this world? Now, I ſay, an undoubted aſſurance is abundantly ſufficient to this end. Do not men venture their eſtates in traffick to places they never ſaw, becauſe they have it from credible perſons, that there are ſuch places; and they have no reaſon to doubt their teſtimony: and why ſhould not the ſame aſſurance ſerve us in greater matters? If an undoubted aſſurance of a leſſer benefit and advantage will make men venture as much, why ſhould any man deſire greater aſſurance of any thing, than to have no juſt reaſon to doubt of it; why more than ſo much as the thing is capable of? I cannot poſſibly underſtand why every man ſhould not be contented with ſufficient aſſurance, or for what reaſon a man ſhould deſire more than enough; and why a man ſhould not be ſatisfied that a thing is ſo, when he hath as great aſſurance of it, and as good evidence for it as he could have, ſuppoſing it were.

And for men to ſay, nothing leſs than infallible aſſurance can ſatisfy a man's mind, that men will always doubt ſo long as there is a poſſibility of the contrary; and there will be a poſſibility of the contrary, until we have infallible aſſurance, is as unreaſonable as can be imagined. I aſk any man, whether he be infallibly aſſured that there was ſuch a man as William the Conqueror? or that there is ſuch a country as Spain? If he ſay he is, I aſk, where is his infallible evidence for this? He will cite ſeveral hiſtorians: but all this is human teſtimony, and that is fallible. It ſeems then he is not infallibly certain there was ſuch a man, or there is ſuch a country; and, conſequently, there is a poſſibility of the contrary. It is granted there is; but is any ſober man unſatisfied in his mind about theſe things? I would fain meet with the man that will tell me, in good earneſt, that he hath reaſon to doubt, whether there was ſuch a man, or not; and whether there be ſuch a place as Spain, or not. So that it is fond for any man to alledge a bare poſſibility of the contrary, as a reaſonable cauſe of doubting concerning any thing, for which we have as good evidence as the thing is capable of.

Upon theſe grounds we can eaſily reſolve our faith. We believe the doctrine of Chriſtian religion, becauſe it is revealed by God; we believe it to be revealed by God, becauſe it was confirmed by unqueſtionable miracles: we believe ſuch miracles were wrought, becauſe we have as great aſſurance of this, as any matter of fact, at ſuch a diſtance from the time it was done, is capable of. Now, if the Papiſts ſay, this doth at laſt amount to no more than moral aſſurance; I grant it doth not: but then I have proved this aſſurance to be as much as in reaſon can be expected, and as much as is ſufficient to the nature and ends of a divine faith, and that an infallible aſſurance is not agreeable to a human underſtanding; but an incommunicable attribute and prerogative of the divine nature, which, whoever pretends to, he hath not the modeſty of a creature, but does, by a ſacrilegious ambition, attempt the throne of God, and equal himſelf to the Moſt High. And, therefore, it is no wonder that the Popes of Rome, after they had once aſſumed to themſelves to be infallible, did preſently arrogate to themſelves the titles of God, there being ſuch ſtrict connection between the attribute of infallibility and the divine nature, that, whoever challengeth the firſt, may, with equal reaſon, claim the other.

I ſhall only add this, that nothing hath been more pernicious to Chriſtian religion, than the vain pretence of men to greater aſſurance concerning things relating to it, than they can make good; the miſchief of which is this; that, when diſcerning and inquiſitive men find that men pretend to greater matters than they can prove, this makes them doubt of all they ſay, and to call in queſtion the truth of Chriſtianity itſelf. Whereas, if men would be contented to ſpeak juſtly of things, and pretend to no greater aſſurance than they can bring evidence for; conſiderate men would be apt to believe them. Every knowing man being more ready to liſten to a modeſt man, whoſe confidence bears a proportion to the reaſons and arguments he brings for what he ſays, than to a confident pretender, who calls every weak ſaying a demonſtration. And, indeed, ſuch men are but juſtly dealt withal, ſince the experience of the world hath ſufficiently taught us, that uſually thoſe who ſpeak modeſtly of things, are furniſhed with the beſt arguments for their aſſertions; and that thoſe who have made the ſtrongeſt pretences to infallibility in any thing, have the weakeſt reaſons for what they have ſaid; of which this account may be given, that good reaſons and arguments are requiſite to beget in a man a rational aſſurance; but a ſtrong conceit is ſufficient to beget in men an opinion of infallibility.

VI. What is the proper and genuine effect of this faith of a divine revelation? I anſwer, a compliance with the deſign and intention of it.

VII. In what reſpect this may be called a divine faith? To this I anſwer; not only in reſpect of the object of it, and the argument whereby it is wrought, and the effect of it; but likewiſe in reſpect of the author and efficient of it, which is the divine Spirit. And here, if time would permit, I ſhould ſpeak of the teſtimony of the Spirit; not as an argument whereby a perſuaſion of a divine revelation, viz. that the ſcriptures are the word uf God, is wrought: but alſo, as he is the author and efficient cauſe of it. I do moſt readily grant the great influence that the Spirit of God hath upon the minds of men in this work of faith, as well as in every ſpiritual act: but it is to be enquired, how the Spirit of God may be ſaid to work this faith in us; whether by ſtrengthening the faculty; or by holding the mind intent upon the argument, whereby this perſuaſion is wrought; or diſcovering the object; or removing the impediments; or furthering and helping forward the efficacy of it upon our hearts and lives. But of this, God willing, in my next diſcourſe.

SERMON CCXXIII.

Of the teſtimony of the Spirit, to the truth of the goſpel.

HEB. xi. 6.

But without faith it is impoſſible to pleaſe God.

The fifth ſermon on this text.

IN diſcourſing of the faith or perſuaſion of a divine revelation, I came to enquire, in what reſpects this may be called a divine faith. To which my anſwer was, that it is a divine faith, not only with reſpect to the object of it, and the argument whereby it is wrought, and the effect of it; but likewiſe in reſpect of the author and efficient of it, which is the divine Spirit. I proceed therefore to conſider the teſtimony of the divine Spirit, not only as an argument whereby a perſuaſion of a divine revelation, viz. That the ſcriptures are the word of God, is wrought; but alſo, as he is the author and efficient cauſe of it. The ſcripture doth in a peculiar manner aſcribe the belief of a divine revelation, eſpecially of the revelation of the goſpel, to the Spirit of God. In this ſenſe the ſcripture ſaith, That no man can ſay, that Jeſus is the Chriſt, but by the Spirit of God. And tho' every good perſuaſion that we have, be in ſome ſort or other to be aſcribed to God, yet I obſerve it to be the phraſe of the New Teſtament, to attribute the belief of the goſpel, in a more peculiar manner, to the Spirit of God. When any man believes the principles of natural religion, that there is a God, that the ſoul is immortal, and that there are rewards after this life, as the Heathens did; even this is from God, who hath planted theſe principles in our natures; or, which comes all to one, hath given us ſuch faculties, by the uſe and improvement of which, we may come to the knowledge of theſe principles: but it is not uſual, in the phraſe of ſcripture, to attribute this natural knowledge, in ſuch a peculiar manner, to the Spirit of God.

When any man believes the matters of divine revelation, for inſtance, the doctrines contained in the goſpel; this faith is to be attributed to the Sprit of God; but not as immediately perſuading us of the truth of theſe doctrines, but by perſuading us, that the goſpel which contains theſe truths, is a divine revelation; or, which is all one, that the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, who delivered theſe doctrines to the world, was a divine perſon, and came from God: and, if we once firmly believe and entertain this, that Jeſus was the Meſſias, and ſent from God to acquaint the world with his mind and will; we can make no doubt of the truth of any thing which he hath delivered. So that the faith which the ſcripture doth, in a peculiar manner, attribute to the Spirit of God, is this perſuaſion, that Jeſus is the Chriſt; that is, that he was the true Meſſias, and ſent from God.

So that the queſtion is, How the Spirit of God doth concur to the begetting of this faith or perſuaſion? Or, Why this faith is, in ſuch a peculiar manner, attributed to the Spirit of God?

I anſwer, upon theſe two accounts:

Firſt, In reſpect of the outward evidence which the Spirit of God gives us, to perſuade us to believe.

Secondly, In reſpect of the inward efficacy and operation of the Spirit of God upon the minds of men in believing.

Firſt,

Firſt, In reſpect to the outward evidence which the Spirit of God gives us, to perſuade us to believe. And if this be not that which divines mean by the teſtimony of the Spirit in this matter, yet, I think, it is that which may moſt properly be ſo called. Now, the Spirit of God did outwardly teſtify concerning Jeſus, that he was the Meſſias, and came from God; and that the doctrine which he taught was divine.

1. In the voice from heaven, which accompanied the deſcending of the Spirit upon him, in the form of a dove, ſaying, This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleaſed, Matth. iii. 17.

2. In thoſe miracles which Chriſt himſelf wrought by the Spirit of God; which were ſo eminent a teſtimony of the Spirit of God, that the reſiſting of the evidence of thoſe miracles, and the attributing of them to the devil, is by our Saviour called a blaſphemy againſt the Holy Ghoſt, and ſuch a ſin as ſhall never be pardoned: becauſe, miracles being the higheſt atteſtation that can be given to the divinity of any perſon, or his doctrine: whoever reſiſts this evidence, reſiſts his laſt remedy; and ſuch a perſon muſt needs remain in his infidelity, becauſe there is nothing more that can be done for his conviction.

3. The third eminent teſtimony which the Holy Spirit gave to Chriſt, was in the great miracle of his reſurrection from the dead; and hence it is that the great miracle of Chriſt's reſurrection, which was the higheſt atteſtation to the divinity of his perſon, and the grand confirmation to his doctrine, is frequently in ſcripture, in a moſt peculiar manner, aſcribed to the Spirit of God, Rom. i. 4. And was declared to be the Son of God with power, according to the Spirit of holineſs, that is, by thoſe miracles which he wrought by the Holy Ghoſt, and by his reſurrection from the dead. And ſo, Rom. viii. 11. The Spirit of him that raiſed up Chriſt from the dead. 1 Peter iii. 18. Being put to death in the fleſh; but quickened by the Spirit.

4. In the effuſion of the Spirit upon the Apoſtles, who were to preach Chriſt and his doctrine to the world, and that it might carry its evidence along with it, God poured forth his Spirit upon thoſe who were to be the publiſhers of it; by which Spirit they were endowed with ſeveral miraculous powers and gifts, to convince the world of the truth of the doctrine which they preached. And with relation to this, I think, it is, that the Apoſtle ſaith, 1 Cor. ii. 4, 5. And my ſpeech, and my preaching, was not with enticing words of man's wiſdom: but in demonſtration of the Spirit, and of power; that your faith ſhould not ſtand in the wiſdom of men, but in the power of God; that is, they did not uſe human eloquence to perſuade men, but delivered the goſpel with all plainneſs: and that which made thoſe plain diſcourſss ſo powerful, were thoſe powerful demonſtrations of the divine Spirit, which appeared in thoſe miraculous gifts wherewith they were endowed. I am ſure Origen underſtands this text ſo. And ſo likewiſe the Apoſtle, 1 Theſſ. i. 5. ſpeaks to the ſame purpoſe, that the goſpel came not unto you in word only; but alſo in power, and in the Holy Ghoſt, and in much aſſurance; that is, they did not only ſpeak words to men, but the doctrine which they preached was atteſted in a powerful manner by the Holy Ghoſt, in thoſe extraordinary gifts, which were beſtowed upon them, which was a great evidence to their hearers, and gave them great aſſurance of the truth of what they delivered. I think this is the meaning of thoſe two places, but I will mention two others which are more unqueſtionable, Acts v. 32. where Peter, and the reſt of the Apoſtles, tell the high prieſts and their officers, what evidence they had for what they preached, concerning the reſurrection and aſcenſion of Chriſt. We are his witneſſes of theſe things; and ſo is alſo the Holy Ghoſt, whom God hath given to them that obey him. Not only they themſelves had ſeen what they preached; but, to confirm their teſtimony, the Holy Ghoſt was poured forth upon them in miraculous gifts. And, Heb. ii. 3, 4. How ſhall we eſcape, if we neglect ſo great ſalvation, which at the firſt began to be ſpoken by the Lord, and was confirmed unto us by them that heard him; God alſo bearing them witneſs, both with ſigns and wonders, and with divers miracles, and gifts of the Holy Ghoſt, according to his own will? So the Holy Ghoſt gave teſtimony to the truth of the doctrine which the Apoſtles preached, by thoſe gifts which he

And I doubt not, but with relation to the testimony which the Sprit of God gave to Christ, by the miracles he wrought by Christ and his Apostles, I say, I doubt not, but that, with relation to his testimony it is, that the Apostle saith, he was justified in the Spirit, 1 Tim. iii. 16. Great is the mystery of godliness: God was manifest in the flesh, justified in the Spirit: that is, the miraculous power of the Spirit which appeared in him, and did accompany his doctrine, did justify him to the world, and vindicate him from being an impostor and deceiver.

From all which it appears, that the testimony which the Holy Spirit gives to Christ and his doctrine, was the miracles which he and his Apostles wrought by the Spirit of God: and if we will take our forms of speaking from scripture, this is that which may most properly be called the testimony of the Spirit to the truth of the gospel. But I deny not but, besides this outward evidence, which the Spirit of God gives to the truth of the gospel, with respect to which the faith of the gospel is, in a peculiar manner, attributed to the Spirit of God, there is likewise an inward efficacy and operation of the Spirit of God upon the minds of men. Therefore,

Secondly, Faith is, in a peculiar manner, attributed to the Spirit of God, in respect of the inward efficacy and operation of the divine Spirit upon the hearts and minds of those who sincerely and effectually believe and entertain the gospel; I say, who sincerely and effectually believe and entertain the gospel; that is, who so believe and entertain the gospel, as to obey it, and comply with it in their hearts and lives. For I doubt not but that there is so much evidence for the truth and divine authority of the gospel, as is in itself sufficient, without any peculiar operation of the Spirit of God, to silence all oppofers, and to convince them, so far as that they cannot have any sufficient reason to disbelieve it: but withal, I do not think that this faith doth become an abiding and effectual persuasion in any person, without the special operation of the Holy Ghost. Now, that the Spirit of God can work this effectual persuasion in the mind of man, cannot be doubted by any man, who conſiders the vaſt power and influence which the Spirit of God, who made our ſouls, and knows the frame of them, can have upon the mind of man: all the difficulty is about the manner of it; how this faith is wrought in us by the Spirit of God. Now, although it were ſufficient for us to know the thing, though we were ignorant of the manner how it is done, and we might very well reſt ſatisfied in this, that the Spirit of God works this faith in us, though we did not know how he does it; yet, becauſe many have taken upon them to ſtate and determine the particular manner how it is done, it will be requiſite, in order to the rectifying ſome miſtakes about it, to enquire more particularly into this matter.

Now, all the ways that have been aſſigned, or which, I think, we can eaſily imagine, may be reduced to one of theſe ſix heads. When we ſay the Spirit of God works faith in us, we muſt conceive it to be done ſome or all of theſe ways:

1. By ſtrengthening the faculty, that is, raiſing and enabling our underſtanding to yield aſſent to the goſpel. Or,

2. By enlightening and diſcovering the object, that is, the concluſion to be believed. Or,

3. By propounding to us the arguments, or evidence, whereby we may be perſuaded of it. Or,

4. By holding our minds intent upon this evidence, till it have wrought its effect upon us. Or,

5. By removing the impediments which hinder our aſſent. Or,

6. By furthering and helping forward the efficacy of this perſuaſion upon our hearts and lives.

That the Spirit can work faith in us, any, or all of theſe ways, ſo far as they are conſiſtent with one another, I make not the leaſt doubt. For what man, who believes the infinite power of the divine Spirit, can make the leaſt queſtion, whether it can raiſe and heighten our faculties above their natural and ordinary pitch? or whether it can diſcover an object to us, with the greateſt clearneſs and ſatisfaction? or whether it can offer to our minds the beſt arguments, and the higheſt evidence, that a thing is capable of? or whether it can hold our minds intent upon the conſideration of any thing; or whether it can remove all hinderances and impediments? or whether it can make the perſuaſion of any truth effectual? No man in reaſon can doubt of the poſſibility of theſe. But the queſtion is, What reaſon we have to aſſert this or that particular manner? and what neceſſity, and convenience there is from experience, or evidence of ſcripture, ſo to do?

Firſt of all, There ſeems no neceſſity of aſſerting the firſt; though I will not contend with any man that ſhall. For if this be true, that our underſtandings are naturally endowed with a ſufficient power to aſſent to any truth that is ſufficiently propounded to them; then there can be no neceſſity to aſſert, that the Spirit of God doth, in the work of faith, raiſe and elevate our underſtandings above their natural pitch. But, I think, it may eaſily be proved, that our underſtandings are naturally endowed with a ſufficient power to aſſent to any truth that is ſufficiently propounded to them; and that, in ſuch a caſe, nothing hinders the aſſent of men, but their own perverſeneſs and obſtinacy, which uſually proceeds from oppoſition of their luſts, or paſſions, or intereſts, to the truth which is propounded to them. For if mens underſtandings be not naturally endowed with a ſufficient power to yield aſſent to the goſpel, when it is ſufficiently propounded to them, how can it be mens duty to believe it? or what juſtice can condemn them for unbelief? But though there be no neceſſity of aſſerting, that God doth always ſtrengthen and elevate the underſtanding of thoſe who believe; yet there is no reaſon to deny, but that God may do this when he pleaſeth, and poſſibly he often doth it.

God is ſaid, in ſcripture, to enlighten the eyes of our underſtandings, which we may, if we pleaſe, underſtand in this ſenſe; although that may be done by propounding ſuch truths to us as we were ignorant of before, and could not have diſcovered, unleſs they had been revealed.

Secondly, The ſecond way whereby the Spirit of God may be conceived to work faith in us, is by enlightening and diſcovering the object, or thing to be believed. In the caſe we are ſpeaking of, the object, or thing to be believed, is the goſpel: now, we may imagine the Spirit of God may work a faith or perſuaſion of this in us, by revealing or diſcovering to us this propoſition, That the goſpel is true. But this I need not ſpeak much to, becauſe I do not know any that pretend to have a particular and immediate revelation from God, that the goſpel is true. So that, though God may do this when he pleaſeth, yet I do not know any who aſſert this to be the way whereby faith is wrought in men.

Thirdly, The Spirit of God may be conceived to work faith in us, by propounding and offering to us ſuch arguments and evidence as are apt to perſuade us of the truth of the goſpel. And this the Spirit of God, which inſpired the writers of the ſcripture, doth mediately by the ſcriptures, and thoſe characters of divinity which are in the doctrines contained in them; and by thoſe miracles, which are there credibly related to be wrought by the Spirit of God, for the confirmation of that doctrine. And, beſides this, the Spirit of God may, when he pleaſeth, and probably often doth, immediately ſuggeſt thoſe arguments to our minds, and bring them to our remembrance.

Fourthly, The Spirit of God may be conceived to work faith in us, by holding our minds intent upon this evidence, till it hath wrought its effect upon us. And this, I do not doubt, but the Spirit of God, out of his abundant grace and goodneſs to men, often doth; and, I believe, many men have found their minds kept intent upon ſuch conſiderations, as have mightily prevailed upon them, and been effectual to perſuade them to entertain and obey the goſpel; and muſt acknowledge that their minds were awakened by ſuch conſiderations, and made attentive to them, beyond their own inclinations to think upon ſuch things; and in ſuch a ſtrange and unaccountable manner, as they cannot in reaſon but attribute to ſome ſuperior influence, viz. to the Holy Spirit of God.

Fifthly, By removing the impediments which hinder our effectual aſſent to the goſpel. And in this, and the laſt particular, I conceive the work of the Spirit of God, in the producing of faith principally to conſiſt: I ſay, in theſe principally, not abſolutely excluding the former. The great impediment to the belief and entertainment of the goſpel, is the prejudice which the minds of men are apt to conceive againſt it, either upon account of their education in a contrary religion, or upon account of their luſts, or ſome worldly intereſt, to which the goſpel is oppoſite. Now, theſe are as ſo many bars upon the underſtandings of men, to keep out the truth from entering into them. The prejudice of a contrary education is a monſtrous obſtacle to religion. When men have believed otherwiſe from their youth, and have had contrary principles implanted in them in their tender years, and have all their lives been poſſeſſed with contrary apprehenſions of things; the cleareſt truths that can be offered to them, come upon infinite diſadvantage; their underſtandings are tinctured, and put falſe colours upon every thing that is repreſented to them. And this was the caſe of the Jews, when the Meſſias came: they were poſſeſſed with prejudices againſt his mean appearance, and had faſhioned to themſelves another kind of Meſſias, that ſhould be a glorious temporal prince; and had been brought up in this apprehenſion; and this made them ſo invincibly obſtinate againſt the reception of him, though the whole nation, when he came, were in expectation of him. And this was alſo the caſe of the Gentiles, when the goſpel was firſt preached to them: they had been educated in a contrary religion, and were poſſeſſed with quite other apprehenſions, which made the paſſage of the goſpel infinitely difficult. And I doubt not, but that, in the firſt publiſhing of the goſpel, the Spirit did remarkably work upon the minds of men, for the removing of theſe prejudices, and thereby making way for the entertainment of the goſpel. And though this prejudice be not now upon us in theſe parts of the world, who are brought up in the Chriſtian religion; yet the luſts and intereſts of men are now great obſtacles to the effectual entertainment of the goſpel; and the Spirit of God doth many times eminently appear, in the reſtraining and conquering the luſts of men, and removing thoſe other prejudices which hinder them from embracing the truth.

Sixthly, The laſt way whereby the Spirit of God may be ſaid to work in us an effectual belief of the goſpel, is, by furthering and helping forward the efficacy of this perſuaſion upon our hearts and lives, in the firſt work of con-

verſion and regeneration, and in the progreſſive work of ſanctification afterward, both which the ſcripture doth every where attribute to the Spirit of God, as the author and efficient cauſe. The faith which purifies the heart, and conquers the world, and works by love, hath this effect from the Spirit of God. Hence we are ſaid to be ſanctified by the renewing of the Holy Ghoſt, and the belief of the truth, and to be kept by the mighty power of God, through faith unto ſalvation.

Thus I have ſhewn you, as briefly and clearly as I could, how the Spirit of God doth concur to the begetting of this divine faith and perſuaſion in us, and, conſequently, in what reſpects faith may be ſaid to be the gift of God. I ſhall only draw two or three inferences from this diſcourſe.

I. We may learn from hence to attribute all the good that is in us, or that we do in any kind, to God. Every good thing is from God; ſo St James tells us, that every good and perfect work comes down even from the Father of lights. Much more are we to aſcribe to the free grace of God, all the revelation of ſupernatural truth, which we cannot poſſibly come to the knowledge of, unleſs God, of his free grace and goodneſs, be pleaſed to diſcover it to us. And ſo likewiſe are we to aſcribe to God, and the operation of his Holy Spirit upon our hearts, our belief of thoſe truths, and aſſent to them. Conſidering the corruption and degeneracy of human nature, and the oppoſition of the luſts and prejudices of men to divine truth, we ſtand in need of the grace of God, and the operation of his Spirit upon our hearts, to bring us to a firm aſſent to the goſpel; for as fleſh and blood could not reveal theſe truths to us, ſo neither is it very apt to aſſent to them when they are revealed.

In the phraſe of ſcripture, all good is attributed to God; and all ſpiritual good to the Holy Spirit of God working in us, and aſſiſting us to the doing of it. As, on the other hand, the ſcripture attributes all thoſe ſins that are committed in the world, to the influence of evil ſpirits. He that committeth ſin is of the devil. And though we do not know, many times, how the Spirit of God worketh a good inclination in us, yet it is safe to follow the phrase of scripture, and to ascribe all good to God, as in some way or other the author of it.

II. This doth not excuse the infidelity of men, that faith is the gift of God. For though no man doth believe without some influence of the divine Spirit upon his heart, yet this does by no means excuse those who believe not, any more than it is an excuse to the infidelity of men, that the scripture attributes it to the devil, as in some sort the cause of it. He is said to blind the eyes of them that believe not, lest the light of the glorious gospel of Christ should shine into them. But the unbelief of men is a fault for all this; because the devil cannot blind our minds, unless we consent to it: he can only suggest false principles to us, but we may chuse whether we will entertain them or not, he can only tempt us to reject the truth; but we may chuse whether we will do so or not. In this we are faulty, because we may resist the devil, and quench or repel those fiery darts which he casts into our minds: but if we will consent to his temptations, and suffer ourselves to be blinded by him, the fault of our unbelief is our own, as well as his; and we are guilty of the infidelity which we suffer him to tempt us to.

So, on the other hand, though faith be the gift of God; yet those that believe not are faulty upon this account, that they quench and resist the blessed motions of God's Spirit, and the influence and operation of the Spirit of God, which accompany the truth of the gospel to the minds of men, and produce their effect wherever they are not opposed and rejected by the prejudice and perverseness of men.

III. Let us depend upon God for every good gift; and earnestly beg the assistance and influence of his Holy Spirit, which is so necessary to us to beget faith in us, and to preserve and to make it effectual upon our hearts and lives. Bread is not more necessary to the support of our natural life, than the Holy Spirit of God to our spiritual life.

For our encouragement to ask this gift of God's Holy Spirit, our Saviour hath told us, that God is very ready to bestow him upon us. No father upon earth is more ready to give bread to his children that cry after him, than God is to give his Spirit to thoſe that heartily and earneſtly beg it of him. So our Saviour aſſures us, Luke xi. 11, 12, 13. If a ſon ſhall aſk bread of any of you that is a father, will he give him a ſtone? or if he aſk a fiſh, will he for a fiſh give him a ſerpent? or if he ſhall aſk an egg, will he offer him a ſcorpion? If ye then being evil, know how to give good gifts unto your children; how much more ſhall your heavenly Father give the Holy Spirit to them that aſk him?

And now I have done with the firſt thing that I propounded, which was to open the nature of faith to you in general. I have been the longer upon this, becauſe I thought it very material, and important to the ſettling of right apprehenſions in us concerning religion and divine things; and I have all along endeavoured to make things as eaſy and plain as the nature of the ſubject would permit. And though probably many things that I have ſaid, might not be within the full reach and comprehenſion of all capacities, yet becauſe I hoped they might be uſeful and beneficial to ſome at leaſt, I could not think the other conſideration a ſufficient reaſon why I ſhould wholly omit them, and paſs them by; remembering what St Paul ſays, that he was a debtor to the wiſe, as well as the unwiſe. And St Peter tells us, that St Paul in his epiſtles wrote many things which were hard to be underſtood by ſome perſons; yet becauſe thoſe things might be of uſe to others, the Spirit of God did not think fit to omit the writing of them. What remains I ſhall reſerve for another diſcourſe, with which I ſhall conclude this ſubject.

SER-

SERMON CCXXIV.

The efficacy, usefulness, and reasonableness of divine faith.

HEB. xi. 6.

But without faith it is impossible to please God.

The sixth sermon on this text.

IN discoursing on these words, I have dispatched the first thing which I proposed, viz. to give an account of the notion and nature of faith in general; under which I have largely treated of a religious or divine faith in particular.

The second thing which I proposed, and to which I now proceed, is to confirm the truth of the proposition which I laid down from the words, viz. That faith is the great principle of religion. I told you that these words, Without faith it is impossible to please God, do not only imply that faith is a necessary condition, without which men cannot be religious; but likewise that it is a cause and principle of religion. Without faith a man cannot be religious: and where there is true faith, it will have this effect upon men to make them religious. Therefore I shall distinctly speak to these two things:

First, That without faith there can be no religion.

Secondly, That where there is a true faith, it will have this influence upon men to make them religious.

First, That without faith there can be no religion. And this will appear by enquiring into the nature of all human actions, whether civil or religious; and this is common to both of them, that they suppose some kind of faith or persuasion. All human actions have an order and reference to some end, and consequently suppoſe ſome knowledge of the end, and of the means whereby it may be attained. So that unleſs a man do believe and be perſuaded that ſuch a thing is ſome way or other good for him, and conſequently deſirable and fit to be propounded as an end, and that this end is attainable, and the means which he uſeth are probable and likely for the attaining of this end, he will ſit ſtill and do nothing at all about it. So that without faith it is impoſſible to do any thing: he that believes nothing, will do nothing.

To inſtance firſt in civil actions, and the common affairs and concernments of life: All theſe are done by virtue of ſome faith or perſuaſion concerning them. For example, huſbandry, or merchandize; no man will apply himſelf to theſe but upon ſome belief or perſuaſion of the poſſibility and neceſſity, or at leaſt uſefulneſs and convenience of theſe to the ends of life. No man would plow or ſow if he did not believe that there were ſuch a thing as the growing of corn, and that it is neceſſary for the ſupport of our lives, and if he were not perſuaded of the probabllity of reaping ſome fruit and benefit of his pains and induſtry. No man would traffick to Turky or the Indies, if he did not believe there were ſuch places, and that they afforded ſuch commodities, and that he might have them upon ſuch terms as might recompenſe the adventure of his charge and pains. And ſo in all other actions of life.

So it is in divine and religious things; nothing is done without faith. No man will worſhip God, unleſs he believe there is a God; unleſs he be perſuaded there is ſuch a being, which, by reaſon of its excellency and perfection, may challenge our veneration; and unleſs he believe the goodneſs of this God, that he will reward thoſe that diligently ſerve him. For all acts of religion being reaſonable, they ſuppoſe at leaſt an object and an end; that there is a God to be worſhipped, and that it is not in vain to ſerve him. This faith is neceſſary to natural religion. And in caſe God do diſcover and reveal his will to men, no man can obey the will of God unleſs he be perſuaded that God hath ſome way or other made known his will; and be perſuaded likewiſe as to the particular inſtance wherein his obedience is required, that this is God's will. For inſtance, no man will obey the precepts of the Bible, as divine laws and commands, unleſs he be perſuaded that the doctrine contained in the holy ſcriptures is a divine revelation. So likewiſe no man can entertain Chriſt as the Meſſias and Saviour of the world, and yield obedience to his laws, unleſs he believes that he was ſent of God, and ordained by him to be a Prince and a Saviour. So that you ſee the neceſſity of faith to religion.

Secondly, I ſhall ſhew the influence that a divine faith hath upon men to make them religious. A true divine faith ſuppoſeth a man ſatisfied and perſuaded of the reaſonableneſs and neceſſity of being religious; that it is reaſonable for every man to be ſo, and that it is neceſſary to his intereſt. Now, there needs no more to be done to put a man upon any thing, but to ſatisfy him of theſe two things; that the action you perſuade him to is reaſonable; that is, poſſible and fit to be done; and that it is highly his intereſt to do it: that is, if he do it, it will be eminently for his advantage; if he do not do it, it will be eminently to his prejudice, and he is a loſt and undone man. If you can once poſſeſs a man, that is in any degree ſober and conſiderate, with theſe perſuaſions, you may make him do any thing of which he is thus perſuaded. Now a true divine faith ſuppoſeth a man ſatisfied and perſuaded of all this.

1. Of the reaſonableneſs of religion. He that verily believes there is a God, believes there is a being that hath all excellency and perfection, that is infinitely good, and wiſe, and juſt, and powerful, that made and preſerves all things. Now, he that believes ſuch a being as this, cannot but think it reaſonable that he ſhould be eſteemed, and honoured, and adored by all thoſe creatures that are ſenſible and apprehenſive of theſe excellencies; that ſeeing he is infinitely good, and the fountain of all being, and all the bleſſings we enjoy, we ſhould love ſo great a benefactor, and thankfully acknowledge his goodneſs to us; not only by conſtant praiſe of him, but by an univerſal obedience to his will, and a chearful ſubmiſſion to his pleaſure. For what more reaſonable than gratitude? that ſeeing he is infinitely wise and powerful as well as good, we should trust in him, and depend upon him in all conditions, and seek to him for what we want? For what more reasonable than to place our confidence in him, who is able and willing to do us good; and to sue to him who knows our wants, and is ready to supply them? And seeing he is truth itself, and hath been pleased to reveal his will to us; what can be more reasonable than to believe all those discoveries and revelations which God who cannot lie, hath made to us, and to comply with the intention of them? And seeing he is the original pattern of all excellency and perfection; what can be more reasonable than to imitate the perfections of the divine nature, and to endeavour to be as like God as we can? And these are the sum of all religion. So that whoever firmly believes a God, and that he hath revealed and made known his will to the world, cannot but be fully satisfied and perswaded of the reasonableness and equity of religion, and all those duties which religion requires of us; and consequently of the possibility of performing all those duties which religion requires of us, by the assistance of the grace and strength which God is ready to afford us, if we beg it of him. For no man that believes the goodness of God, (which every man does that believes a God) can think that he will make it our duty to do any thing which he hath left us in an utter impossibility of doing.

2. A true divine faith supposeth a man satisfied and perswaded of the necessity of religion; that is, that it is necessary to every man's interest to be religious; that it will be highly for our advantage to be so, and eminently to our prejudice to be otherwise; that if we be so, we shall be happy, if we be not, we shall be miserable, and undone for ever. And every man that believes a God, and the revelations which he hath made, cannot but be fully satisfied of this.

And this will appear upon these two accounts:

1. From the nature and reason of the thing. And,
2. From the promises and threatenings of God's word.

1. From the nature and reason of the thing. Every man that believes a God, must believe him to be the supreme ſupreme good; and the greateſt happineſs to conſiſt in the enjoyment of him, and a ſeparation from him to be the greateſt miſery. Now, God is not to be enjoyed, but in a way of religion. Holineſs makes us like to God; and likeneſs will make us love him; and love will make us happy in the enjoyment of him; and without this it is impoſſible to be happy. There can be no happineſs without pleaſure and delight; and we cannot take pleaſure in any thing we do not love; and there can be no love, without a likeneſs and ſuitableneſs of diſpoſition. So long as God is good, and we evil; ſo long as he is pure, and we unholy; ſo long as he hates ſin, and we love it; there can be no happy intercourſe, no agreeable communion, and delightful ſociety between God and us. So that if we be holy, happineſs will reſult from this temper; and if we be wicked, we are neceſſarily and unavoidably miſerable. Sin ſeparates between God and us, and hinders our happineſs; and it is impoſſible that a wicked man ſhould be near God, or enjoy him. God and a ſinner are ſuch two unequal matches, that it is impoſſible to bring them together; for what fellowſhip hath righteouſneſs with unrighteouſneſs? or what communion hath light with darkneſs?

2. Every man which believes the revelations which God hath made, cannot but be ſatisfied how much religion is his intereſt, from the promiſes and threatenings of God's word. God in his word hath in plain and expreſs terms promiſed everlaſting glory and happineſs to them that obey him; and hath threatened wicked men with dreadful and eternal puniſhments; to them that by patient continuance in well-doing, ſeek for glory, and honour, and immortality, he hath promiſed eternal life; but to them that obey not the truth, but obey unrighteouſneſs, he hath threatened indignation and wrath, tribulation and anguiſh. Now, if we believe the goſpel, which aſſures us of another life after this, and a future judgment which will determine all men to a ſtate of everlaſting happineſs or miſery, we cannot but know it to be our intereſt, by all poſſible means to endeavour to attain the happineſs which God hath promiſed, and to avoid the miſery which he hath threatened. All men naturally rally deſire happineſs, and dread miſery and deſtruction; and theſe deſires and fears are intimate to our natures, and can never be ſeparated from them; becauſe they flow immediately from thoſe principles of ſelf-love, and ſelf-preſervation, which are deeply rooted in every man's heart, and are woven into the very make and frame of his nature, and will laſt as long as our beings. And ſo long as theſe principles remain in us, there is no man that is firmly perſuaded of the promiſes and threatenings of the Goſpel, but muſt believe it to be his higheſt intereſt to be religious. Fear and hope are the two paſſions which govern us; hope is as it were the ſpur that quickens us to our duty, and fear is the curb that reſtrains us from ſin; and the greater the good hoped for, or the evil that is feared, the greater power and influence theſe paſſions have upon us. Now, there cannot be a greater good, than complete and everlaſting happineſs; nor a greater evil than extreme and eternal miſery. So that whoever believes the promiſes and threatenings of the goſpel, hath his hope raiſed to the expectation of the greateſt good and happineſs in caſe of obedience; and his fears extended to the expectation of the greateſt evil and miſery in caſe of final impenitency and diſobedience. And a true divine faith doth contain in it both this hope and fear: for a faith in the promiſes of the goſpel is nothing elſe, but the hopes of eternal life; and a belief of the threatenings of the goſpel is nothing elſe, but the fear of hell and eternal miſery, ſo that a firm belief of the promiſes and threatenings of the goſpel, muſt needs have as great influence upon men to make them religious, as the higheſt hopes and greateſt fears can have: and thoſe men that are not moved by the hopes of the greateſt good, nor by the fears of the greateſt danger, are not to be wrought upon in human ways, nothing will prevail with them.

Thus I have ſhewn you, what influence a divine faith hath upon religion; for as much as whoever believes there is a God, and that the ſcriptures are the word of God, is fully ſatisfied and convinced how reaſonable it is, and how much it is his intereſt to be religious. I come in the laſt place to the application of this diſcourſe.

Firſt,

Firſt, This ſhews why there is ſo little of true religion in the world; it is for want of faith, without which it is impoſſible for men to be religious. Men are not firmly perſuaded that there is a God; that there is a being above them that is omniſcient, and knows every thing that they do, and takes notice of every word, and thought, and action; that is ſo good, and ſo powerful, as to make thoſe happy that love and obey him; and ſo juſt and powerful, as to make thoſe miſerable who hate him, and rebel againſt him. Men are not perſuaded that their ſouls are immortal, and that there is another life after this, in which men ſhall be happy or miſerable to all eternity, according as they demean themſelves in this world. Men are not firmly perſuaded that the ſcriptures are the word of God, and that the precepts and prohibitions of the Bible are the laws of a great King, who will amply reward the obſervance of his laws, and ſeverely vindicate the breach and violation of them. Men do not believe that the promiſes and threatenings of God's word are true, and that every jot and tittle of them ſhall be accompliſhed. For did men believe theſe things, they would be religious; they would not dare to live in any known ſin or impiety of life; unleſs we can preſume that a man can be ſeriouſly unwilling to be happy, and have a longing deſire to be miſerable, and undone for ever. For whoever believes the principles of religion, and the precepts, and promiſes, and threatenings that are contained in this holy book, and yet after all this can continue in ſin, he muſt not only put off the principles of a reaſonable creature, but muſt quit the very inclinations of his nature; that is, he muſt knowingly refuſe that which he naturally deſires, which is happineſs; and muſt embrace that which of all things that can be imagined he moſt abhors, and that is miſery.

So that if men were verily perſuaded, that the great, and holy, and juſt God looks continually upon them, and that it is impoſſible to hide from him any thing that we do, they would not dare to commit any ſin in his ſight, and under the eye of him who is their Father and Maſter, their Sovereign and their Judge, their Friend and Benefactor, who is inveſted will all theſe titles, titles, and ſtands to us in all theſe relations which may challenge reverence and reſpect. Did men believe the holineſs and juſtice of God, that he hates ſin, and will not let it go unpuniſhed, would they venture to make him a witneſs of their wickedneſs, who they believe will be the avenger of it? Did men believe that they ſhall live for ever, and that after this ſhort life is ended, they muſt enter upon eternity; that when they leave the world, there are but two ways which all men muſt go, either into life everlaſting, or into eternal and intolerable torments; did men believe this, would they not with all poſſible care and diligence endeavour to attain the one, and avoid the other? Were men poſſeſſed with a belief of eternity, how would they deſpiſe temporal and tranſitory things? How would they neglect the concernments of this life, and overlook the little impertinencies of time, and refer all their thoughts, and cares, and endeavours, to eternity? This great and important intereſt, would ſo fill their minds, and take up their thoughts, and employ their utmoſt cares, and endeavours, and diligence, that they would ſcarce regard or ſpeak, or think of any elſe; they would be reſtleſs and impatient, till they had ſecured this grand affair and concernment; they would ſubordinate all the intereſts of this world to that of the other, and make all the concernments of time to ſtoop to the grand concernment of eternity. Thus men would do, were they but firmly perſuaded that there is another life after this, to which this bears no proportion.

Did men believe the ſcriptures to be the word of God, and to contain matters of the higheſt importance to our everlaſting happineſs; would they neglect it and lay it aſide, and ſtudy it no more than a man would do an almanack out of date, or than a man, who believes the attaining the philoſopher's ſtone to be impoſſible, would ſtudy thoſe books that treat of it? If men did believe that it contains plain and eaſy directions for the attaining of eternal happineſs, and eſcaping eternal miſery; they would converſe much with it, make it their companion and their counſellor, meditate in it day and night, read it with all diligence, and put in practice the directions of it.

So

So that whatever men pretend, it is plain, that thoſe who neglect God and religion, and contradict the precepts of his word by their lives, they do not firmly believe there is a God, nor that this book is the word of God. If this faith and perſuaſion were firmly rooted in men, they could not live wickedly. For a man that deſires happineſs, can no more neglect thoſe means which he is convinced are neceſſary for the obtaining of it, than a man that deſires life can neglect the means which he knows to be neceſſary for the preſervation of it.

Secondly, If faith have ſo great an influence upon religion, then the next uſe ſhall be to perſuade men to believe. No man can be religious that doth not believe theſe two things:

Firſt, The principles of natural religion; that there is a God; that his ſoul is immortal; and that there are future rewards.

Secondly, That the ſcriptures are the word of God; or, which comes all to one, that the doctrine contained in them is a divine revelation. Therefore whoever would perſuade men to be religious, he muſt begin here; and whoever would improve men in religion and holineſs, he muſt labour to ſtrengthen this principle of faith. Faith is the root of all other graces; and they will flouriſh, or decay, according to the degrees of our faith. Now, he that would perſuade a man, or prevail with him to do any thing, muſt do it one of theſe three ways; either by intreaty, or authority, or argument; either he muſt intreat him as a friend, or command him as ſubject to him and under his power, or convince him as a man. Now, he that ſhould go about to intreat men to believe any thing, or to charge them ſo to do, before he hath convinced them by ſufficient arguments, that it is reaſonable to do ſo, would, in my opinion, take a prepoſterous courſe. He that intreats or chargeth a man to do any thing, ſuppoſeth that he can do the thing if he will: but a man cannot believe what he will; the nature of a human underſtanding is ſuch, that it cannot aſſent without evidence, nor believe any thing to be true, unleſs it ſee reaſon ſo to do, any more than a man can ſee a thing without light. So that if the deareſt friend that I have in the world ſhould beg of me with the greateſt importunity; or any man that hath the greateſt authority over me, ſhould lay his ſevereſt commands upon me to believe a thing, for which I ſee no reaſon, I could not do it; becauſe nothing can command aſſent, but evidence. So that he that would perſuade men to believe either the principles of natural religion, or any divine revelation, muſt convince them of the truth of them; for it is unreaſonable to deſire a man to believe any thing, unleſs I give him good reaſon why he ſhould.

And this being the proper courſe which is to be taken, there are two ſorts of perſons to whom I ſhall apply myſelf in this exhortation; thoſe who do not believe theſe things; and thoſe who are perſuaded of them: to the former, in order to the begetting of faith in them; to the latter, in order to the ſtrengthening and confirming of their faith.

Thoſe who do not believe, are of two ſorts; either ſuch as do poſitively diſbelieve theſe things, and make it their buſineſs to arm themſelves againſt them with all the arguments they can; who are ſo far from believing a God, or any divine revelation, that they endeavour to perſuade themſelves of the contrary, that there is no ſuch thing; or elſe they are ſuch as are indifferent about theſe matters. They have received the principles of religion by their education; and they have nothing to ſay againſt them, nor for them; they never conſidered them, nor the proper conſequences of them; they neither believe nor diſbelieve them upon any reaſonable account.

Now, all theſe are to be dealt withal in the ſame way; for whatever will convince the diſbeliever, will much more perſuade the indifferent, and confirm the weak. For faith is to be ſtrengthened by the ſame arguments whereby it is wrought. Therefore I ſhall apply myſelf to convince unbelievers; and every one may apply thoſe arguments which I uſe to this purpoſe, for the ſtrengthening of their own faith.

But before I come to thoſe arguments I intend to offer for the conviction of thoſe that do not believe, I think it convenient to endeavour, if poſſible, to remove a violent, violent, and, I think, unreasonable prejudice, which men have received against all those who endeavour to make religion reasonable. As if Bellarmine had been in the right, when he said, That faith was rather to be defined by ignorance than by knowledge. The plain English of which is, that it is for want of understanding that men believe the gospel; and if the world were but a little more knowing and wise, no body would be a Christian. I know not how it comes to pass, whether through the artifice of the Popish party, who hate the light, lest it should reprove them, and make them manifest; or through the ignorance of too many well-meaning Protestants; I say, I know not how it comes to pass, but so it is, that every one that offers to give a reasonable account of his faith, and to establish religion upon rational principles, is presently branded for a Socinian; of which we have a sad instance in that incomparable person Mr Chillingworth, the glory of this age and nation, who, for no other cause that I know of, but his worthy and successful attempts to make Christian religion reasonable, and to discover those firm and solid foundations upon which our faith is built, hath been requited with this black and odious character. But if this be Socinianism, for a man to enquire into the grounds and reasons of Christian religion, and to endeavour to give a satisfactory account why he believes it, I know no way but that all considerate, inquisitive men, that are above fancy and enthusiasm, must be either Socinians or Atheists.

I cannot imagine how men can do greater disservice to religion, than by taking it off from the rational and solid basis upon which it stands, and bearing the world in hand, that men ought to believe without reason; for this is to turn faith into credulity, and to level Christian religion with the vilest and most groundless enthusiasms that ever were in the world. Indeed, if we had only to deal with Henry Nicholas, and Jacob Behmen, who fight against us in the dark, not with reasons and arguments, but with insignificant words, and obscure phrases; we might make a shift to bear up against them with this principle, and we might charge them to believe us, as they do us to believe them, without giving them any reason for it: but if we were to deal with Celsus, or Julian, or Porphyry, or ſome of our modern atheiſts, we ſhould ſoon find how vain it would be to go about to cajole them with phraſes, and to gain them over to Chriſtianity, by telling them that they muſt deny their reaſon, and lay aſide their underſtandings, and believe they know not why. If the great pillars of Chriſtianity, the ancient fathers, had taken this courſe in their apologies for Chriſtian religion, it had never triumphed over Judaiſm and Paganiſm as it did; and whoever hath read over thoſe defences and vindications of Chriſtian religion againſt Jews and Heathens, which were written in the firſt ages of the church, eſpecially the books of Origen againſt Celſus, and Euſebius his book de Demonſt. and Præparat. Evangel. ſhall find that they did very ſolicitouſly endeavour to ſatisfy the world, by all rational ways, both of the truth and reaſonableneſs of Chriſtian religion. And if that was a good way then, it is ſo now; and never more neceſſary than in this age, which I fear hath as many atheiſts and infidels, that go under the name of Chriſtians, as ever were in any age ſince Chriſtian religion was firſt planted in the world.

But my deſign, at preſent, is not to perſuade men particularly to the belief of Chriſtianity, (that I intend hereafter, by God's aſſiſtance, to ſpeak to), but to perſuade men to the belief of religion in general. So that all that I ſhall do at preſent, ſhall be, as briefly as I can, to offer ſome arguments and conſiderations to perſuade men to the belief of the principles of natural religion, and of the revelation which God hath made of his mind and will in the holy ſcriptures.

I. To perſuade men to believe the principles of natural religion, ſuch as the being of a God; the immortality of the ſoul; and future rewards after this life; I ſhall offer theſe two conſiderations.

Firſt, That it is moſt reaſonable ſo to do.

Secondly, That it is infinitely moſt prudent.

Firſt, As to the being of God. Do but conſider theſe two things which are undeniable; that there is a world, however it came; and that mankind do generally conſent in a confident perſuaſion that there is a God, whatever be the cauſe of it. Now, theſe two things being certain, and not liable to any queſtion, let us enquire whether a reaſonable account can be given of theſe without a God.

and

1. Suppoſing there be no God, how came this vaſt and orderly frame of the world? There are but two ways that can be imagined. Either it was from eternity always of itſelf; or it began ſome time to be. That it ſhould be always of itſelf; though it may be imagined of the heavens, and the earth, which, as to the main, are permanent, and continue the ſame; yet in things that ſucceed one after another, it is altogether unimaginable. As in the generation of men, there can be no doubt, whether every one of them was from another, or ſome of themſelves. Some of them muſt be of themſelves; for whatever number of cauſes be imagined in orderly ſucceſſion, ſome of them muſt have no cauſe, but be of themſelves. Now, that which is of itſelf, and the cauſe of all others, is the firſt. So that there muſt be a firſt man; and the age of man being finite, this firſt man muſt have a beginning. So that an infinite ſucceſſion of men ſhould have been, is impoſſible; and, conſequently, that men were always. But I need not inſiſt much upon this, becauſe few or none of our modern atheiſts pitch upon this way. Beſides that, Ariſtotle, who is reputed the great aſſertor of the eternity of the world, doth acknowledge an infinite progreſs and ſucceſſion of cauſes to be one of the greateſt abſurdities.

Suppoſe then the world began ſometime to be; it muſt either be made by counſel and deſign; that is, produced by ſome being that knew what it did, that did contrive and frame it as it is; which it is eaſy to conceive a being that is infinitely good, and wiſe, and powerful, might do; but this is to own a God: or elſe the matter of it being ſuppoſed to have been always, and in continual motion and tumult, it, at laſt, happened to fall into this order, and the parts of matter, after various agitations, were at length intangled and knit together in this order, in which we ſee the world to be. But can any man think this reaſonable to imagine, that, in the infinite variety which is in the world, all things ſhould happen by chance, as well and as orderly as the greateſt wiſdom could have contrived them? Whoever can believe this, muſt do it with his will, and not with his underſtanding.

But ſeeing it muſt be granted, that ſomething is of itſelf; how eaſy is it to grant ſuch a being to be of itſelf, as hath other perfections proportionable to neceſſary exiſtence, that is infinitely good, and wiſe, and powerful? And there will be no difficulty in conceiving how ſuch a being as this ſhould make the world.

2. This likewiſe is undeniable, that mankind do generally conſent, in a confident perſuaſion, that there is a God, whatever was the cauſe of this. Now, the reaſon of ſo univerſal a conſent in all places and ages of the world, muſt be one and conſtant: but no one and conſtant reaſon of this can be given, unleſs it be from the frame and nature of man's mind and underſtanding, which hath the notion of a Deity ſtamped upon it, or, which is all one, hath ſuch an underſtanding, as will, in its own free uſe and exerciſe, find out a God. And what more reaſonable than to think, that if we be God's workmanſhip, he ſhould ſet this mark of himſelf upon us, that we might know to whom we belong? And I dare ſay, that this account muſt needs be much more reaſonable and ſatisfactory to any indifferent man, than to reſolve this univerſal conſent into tradition, or ſtate-policy, both which are liable to inexplicable difficulties, as * I have elſewhere ſhewn at large.

II. As to the immortality of the ſoul. Suppoſing a God, who is an infinite ſpirit, it is eaſy to imagine the poſſibility of a finite ſpirit: and ſuppoſing the goodneſs of God, no man can doubt, but that when he made all things, he would make ſome beſt: and the ſame goodneſs which moved him to make things, would be a reaſon to continue thoſe things for the longeſt duration they are capable of.

III. As to future rewards. Suppoſing the holineſs and juſtice of God, that he loves righteouſneſs, and hates iniquity; and that he is the magiſtrate and governor of the world, and concerned to countenance goodneſs and diſcourage ſin; and conſidering the promiſcuous diſpenſation of his providence in this world, and how all things happen alike to all; it is moſt reaſonable to conclude, that, after this life, men ſhall be puniſhed and rewarded.

Secondly, It is infinitely moſt prudent. In matters of great concernment, a prudent man will incline to the ſafeſt ſide of the queſtion. We have conſidered which ſide of theſe queſtions is moſt reaſonable: let us now think which is ſafeſt. For it is certainly moſt prudent to incline to the ſafeſt ſide of the queſtion. Suppoſing the reaſons for and againſt the principles of religion were equal, yet the danger and hazard is ſo unequal; as would ſway a prudent man to the affirmative. Suppoſe a man believe there is no God; nor life after this; and ſuppoſe he be in the right, but not certain that he is, for that, I am ſure, in this caſe is impoſſible; all the advantage he hath by this opinion, relates only to this world and this preſent time: for he cannot be the better for it when he is not. Now, what advantage will it be to him in this life? He ſhall have the more liberty to do what he pleaſeth; that is, it furniſheth him with a ſtronger temptation to be intemperate, and luſtful, and unjuſt, that is, to do thoſe things which prejudice his body and his health, which cloud his reaſon, and darken his underſtanding, which will make him enemies in the world, and will bring him into danger. So that it is no advantage to any man to be vicious: and yet this is the greateſt uſe that is made of atheiſtical principles, to comfort men in their vicious courſes. But if thou haſt a mind to be virtuous, and temperate, and juſt, the belief of the principles of religion will be no obſtacle, but a furtherance to thee in this courſe. All the advantage a man can hope for by diſbelieving the principles of religion, is to eſcape trouble and perſecution in this world, which may happen to him on account of religion. But ſuppoſing there be a God, and a life after this; then what a vaſt difference is there of the conſequences of theſe opinions! As much as between finite and infinite, time and eternity!

Thirdly, To perſuade men to believe the ſcriptures, I only offer this to mens conſideration. If there be a God, whoſe providence governs the world, and all the creatures in it, is it not reaſonable to think that he hath a particular care of men, the nobleſt part of this viſible world?

world? And ſeeing he hath made them capable of eternal duration; that he hath provided for their eternal happineſs, and ſufficiently revealed to them the way to it, and the terms and conditions of it: now let any man produce any book in the world, that pretends to be from God, and to do this; that for the matter of it, is ſo worthy of God, the doctrines whereof are ſo uſeful, and the precepts ſo reaſonable, and the arguments ſo powerful, the truth of all which was confirmed by ſo many great and unqueſtionable miracles, the relation of which hath been tranſmitted to poſterity, in publick and authentick records, written by thoſe who were eye and ear witneſſes of what they wrote, and free from ſuſpicion of any worldly intereſt and deſign; let any produce a book like to this, in all theſe reſpects; and which, over and beſides, hath, by the power and reaſonableneſs of the doctrines contained in it, prevailed ſo miraculouſly in the world, by weak and inconſiderable means, in oppoſition to all the wit and power of the world, and under ſuch diſcouragements, as no other religion was ever aſſaulted with, let any man bring forth ſuch a book, and he hath my leave to believe it as ſoon as the Bible. But if there be none ſuch, as I am well aſſured there is not, then every one that thinks God hath revealed himſelf to men, ought to embrace and entertain the doctrine of the holy ſcriptures, as revealed by God.

And now, having preſented men with ſuch arguments and conſiderations as are proper, and, I think, ſufficient to induce belief, I think it not unreaſonable to intreat and urge men diligently and impartially to conſider theſe matters; and if there be weight in theſe conſiderations to ſway reaſonable men, that they would not ſuffer themſelves to be biaſſed by prejudice or paſſion, or intereſt, to a contrary perſuaſion. Thus much I may, with reaſon, deſire of men: for though men cannot believe what they will, yet men may, if they will, conſider things ſeriouſly and impartially, and yield or with-hold their aſſent, as they ſhall ſee cauſe, after a thorough ſearch and examination.

If any man will offer a ſerious argument againſt any of the principles of religion, and will debate the matter ſoberly, ſoberly, as one that conſiders the infinite conſequences of theſe things one way or other, and would gladly be ſatisfied, he deſerves to be heard what he can ſay: but if a man will turn religion into raillery, and confute it by two or three bold jeſts; he doth not make religion, but himſelf ridiculous, in the opinion of all conſiderate men; becauſe he ſports with his life.

So that it concerns every man that would not trifle away his ſoul, and fool himſelf into irrecoverable miſery, with the greateſt ſerioufneſs to enquire into theſe things, whether they be ſo or no, and patiently to conſider the arguments that are brought for them.

And when you are examining theſe matters, do not take into conſideration any ſenſual or worldly intereſt; but deal fairly and impartially with yourſelves. Think with yourſelves that you have not the making of things true and falſe; that the principles of religion are either true or falſe, before you think of them. The truth of things is already fixed; either there is a God, or no God; either your ſouls are immortal, or they are not; either the ſcriptures are a divine revelation, or an impoſture; one of theſe is certain and neceſſary, and they are not now to be altered: things will not comply with your conceits, and bend themſelves to your intereſts. Therefore do not think what you would have to be; but conſider impartially what is †.

And if, upon enquiry, you be convinced that it is the greateſt reaſon and prudence to believe that there is a God, and a future ſtate, and that the ſcriptures are the word of God; then meditate much of theſe things; attend to the proper conſequences of ſuch a perſuaſion; and reſolve to live as becomes thoſe who believe there is a God, and another life after this, and that it is beſt for you to obey the precepts of his word, being perſuaded, that whatever is there promiſed in caſe of obedience, or threatened in caſe of diſobedience, will certainly be accompliſhed.

And labour to ſtrengthen yourſelves in this belief; becauſe faith is the ſpring of all rational actions, and the root of all other graces; and according to the ſtrength and weakneſs of faith, your holineſs, and obedience, and graces, will flouriſh or decay.

And becauſe the matters of faith do not fall under our ſenſes, and the things of another world are inviſible, and at diſtance, and conſequently not ſo apt to affect us, as preſent and viſible things, we ſhould take the more pains with ourſelves, that by revolving frequently in our minds the thoughts of God, and repreſenting to ourſelves the happineſs and miſery of another world, they may have as great an effect upon us, as if they were preſent to us, and we ſaw them with our bodily eyes.

SERMON CCXXV.

Of the Chriſtian faith, the means of its conveyance, and our obligation to receive it.

JOHN XX. 31.

But theſe are written, that ye might believe that Jeſus is the Chriſt, the Son of God, and that believing ye might have life through his name.

The firſt ſermon on this text.

I Have largely diſcourſed concerning the general nature of faith, and more particularly concerning the faith which is truly divine and religious; in the latitude of which is contained a perſuaſion concerning the principles of natural religion, the being of God, the immortality of the ſoul, and a future ſtate; and a perſuaſion of the divine revelation of the ſcriptures, and the matters contained in them. Now, among matters of divine revelation, the doctrine of the goſpel is a principal part; which is the laſt and moſt perfect revelation which God hath made to the world, by his Son Jeſus Chriſt; and a firm belief and perſuaſion of this is, that which is called

Chriſtian

Chriſtian faith, or the faith of the goſpel; and which, by way of eminency, is uſually called faith in the New Teſtament.

Now, Chriſtian faith is not oppoſed to a divine faith, but is comprehended under it; as being a principal and eminent part of divine faith, but not all that which may be called divine faith. Chriſtian faith ſuppoſeth a belief of the principles of natural religion, and a belief of thoſe revelations which God formerly made under the Old Teſtament: but it doth only formally contain in it a belief of the goſpel, viz. that revelation which God hath, in theſe laſt days, made to the world by his Son Jeſus Chriſt. The Heathens, who were deſtitute of divine revelation, did only believe the principles of natural religion; and the generality of them did not believe thoſe but in a very imperfect manner. The Jews, to whom were committed the oracles of God, did ſuperadd to the belief of the principles of natural religion, the belief of ſuch revelations as God was pleaſed to make to them under that diſpenſation. Chriſtian faith ſuperadds to both the former, a belief of the revelation of the goſpel.

I ſhall now, therefore, by God's aſſiſtance, endeavour to open to you the nature of Chriſtian faith from theſe words; in which you have theſe three things conſiderable.

Firſt, The end of committing the goſpel to writing, which was to perſuade men to believe in Chriſt, to propagate and continue Chriſtian faith in the world; Theſe things are written, that ye might believe that Jeſus is the Chriſt, the Son of God; and, by faith, to bring men to a participation of thoſe benefits, and the ſalvation which Chriſt was the author of; and that believing ye might have life through his name. Theſe are written; οὗτοι, theſe; which may either refer to σημεῖα, theſe ſigns or miracles, referring to the former verſe, and many other ſigns, &c. but theſe ſigns or miracles are written to confirm Jeſus to be the perſon he pretended to be, the Meſſias, the Son of God, and, conſequently, to confirm the truth of the doctrine which he delivered; that, by this confirmation, men might be induced to believe him to be the true Meſſias, and to give entertainment to his doctrine.

Or elſe, which is very probable, the word ταῦτα may refer to the whole hiſtory of the goſpel, in which you have an account of the life of Chriſt, and the doctrine which he taught, and the miracles which were wrought for the confirmation of it. And ſo we may look upon theſe two verſes as a concluſion of the whole hiſtory of the goſpel writ by the four evangeliſts. For, as for the chapter following, it ſeems not to be wrirten by St John himſelf, but by the church, probably, as Grotius conjectures, by the church of Epheſus, where he had reſided, and whom he had acquainted with the particulars which are there ſet down; the principal of which is, the prediction of our Saviour concerning his long life, for the ſake of which the reſt of the ſtory ſeems to be brought in; which particular was not fit to be recorded till after his death; I ſay, it ſeems probable that St John ended his goſpel here, and that the laſt chapter was added by others, as the laſt chapter of the Pentateuch was added by ſome other after the death of Moſes; and the laſt chapter of Joſhua after his death. And this ſeems very evident from the 24th verſe of the chapter; where, after a relation of our Saviour's prediction, concerning the diſciple whom Jeſus loved, it is added, This is the diſciple which teſtifieth of theſe things, and wrote theſe things, that is, the foregoing hiſtory of the goſpel, and we know that his teſtimony is true; which ſeems plainly to be ſpoken by ſome other perſons: for it were improper for him to ſay this of himſelf, We know that his teſtimony is true.

So that here ſeems to be the end of the hiſtory of Chriſt which St John wrote; and theſe two verſes ſeem to be the concluſion of the whole goſpel written by the four evangeliſts, and then the ſenſe of them will be this: Many other ſigns truly did Jeſus in the preſence of his diſciples, which are not written in this book; that is, the diſciples were witneſſes of many other miracles which Chriſt wrought, which they did not think neceſſary to ſet down in this book, that is, in this hiſtory of Chriſt written by the four evangeliſts: But theſe are written, that ye might believe that Jeſus is the Chriſt, the Son of God, and that believing ye might have life through his name; that is, theſe things which are recorded in this hiſtory, this account which is here given of the life, and actions, and doctrine, and miracles of Chriſt, is ſufficient to bring men to the faith of the goſpel, to ſatisfy men that Chriſt was the Meſſias, the Son of God, and, conſequently, that his doctrine is true.

And that this concluſion doth refer to the whole hiſtory of the goſpel written by the four evangeliſts, I am induced to believe, upon theſe two accounts.

1. Becauſe St John's goſpel doth not ſeem to be intended for a hiſtory of the life and actions of Chriſt; but an appendix to the hiſtory which had been written before by the other evangeliſts, and to ſupply only what they had omitted. Therefore you ſhall find, that he gives no account of the genealogy or birth of our Saviour, nor of his ſermon upon the mount, which did contain the ſum of his doctrine, nor of any of his miracles, or his other diſcourſes, which are related by the other evangeliſts; nor doth he relate any more of the hiſtory of his life, than was juſt neceſſary to bring in, and connect thoſe things which he thought fit to ſuperadd to the former hiſtory. So that, conſidering how defective this goſpel, taken by itſelf, is in the moſt eſſential parts of the hiſtory of the life, and doctrine, and actions of Chriſt, no man can think that St John did intend this for a full and ſufficient account of the life, and doctrine, and miracles of Chriſt; or that, upon this imperfect relation, in which he had, knowingly, omitted many of the moſt material and conſiderable things belonging to the hiſtory of Chriſt, he could expect that men ſhould receive full ſatisfaction concerning him. Therefore, I think, it is highly reaſonable, and almoſt neceſſary to conclude, that, when he ſays, Theſe things are written, that ye might believe that Jeſus is the Chriſt, the Son of God, he does not ſolely refer to the goſpel which was written by himſelf; but to the whole hiſtory of the goſpel, which was put togethe into one book or volume, which was completed by thi appendix.

2. Another reaſon I have for this, which doth much ſtrengthen this conjecture, is what I find in Euſebius, in the 18th chapter of the third book of his history, where he tells us to this purpose, "That St John, who lived "the last of the apostles, did revise what they had writ- "ten of the history of Christ, and added his gospel as an "appendix to the rest."

I have insisted the longer upon this, that no man might think, when St John says, These things were written that ye might believe, that his gospel, taken alone and by itself, is a sufficient account of Christ, and contains all that was requisite to bring men to believe on him. This is the first thing in the words, the end of committing the gospel to writing.

Secondly, You have here the nature of Christian faith described; it is a believing that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God; that is, that he is the true Messias propheſied of in the Old Testament, and promised as the Saviour of the world; and that he is the Son of God, who came from the Father into the world; and took our nature upon him, that he might teach us, and go before us in the way to eternal happiness.

Thirdly, The blessed effect of this faith, or the benefit that redounds to us upon believing; that believing, ye might have life through his name; that is, that upon these terms and conditions, you might be made partakers, of all those blessings and benefits which Christ, the Saviour of the world, hath purchased for us, which are here set forth to us in the name of life; it being usual, in the phrase of scripture, to express to us those things which are most excellent and desirable by life. Now, the principal benefits which Christ hath purchased, and which, in scripture, we are said to be made partakers of by believing, are regeneration, justification, or pardon of sin, and eternal life and salvation; and the two first of these, as well as the last, are called life in scripture. Regeneration, (in which I include the continuance and progress of this work, which is sanctification), that is, a new life; Rom. vi. 4. it is called newness of life. And we are said to have this life by faith. Gal. ii. 20. And the life which I now live in the flesh, I live by the faith of the Son of God. And Col. ii. 12. Buried with him in baptism, wherein also you are risen with him; that is, regenerated and born to a new life. How? By the faith faith of the operation of God, who hath raiſed him from the dead; that is, by believing the power of God, who raiſed up Chriſt from the dead, for the confirmation of the truth of the goſpel: 1 John v. 1. Whoſoever believeth that Jeſus is the Chriſt, is born of God. So likewiſe juſtification is called life. While we are under ſentence of condemnation, we are dead in law: but, being juſtified and pardoned, we are reſtored to life. So the Apoſtle expreſſeth it, Rom. v. 18. So by the righteouſneſs of one, the free gift came upon all men unto juſtification of life. And that we are juſtified by faith, the ſcripture tells us ſo frequently, that I ſhall not cite any texts for it.

And then eternal life and ſalvation; and this is the conſummation of all, and I doubt not but is here principally intended in the text by the word life. So that the meaning of this expreſſion, that believing ye might have life through his name, is, that, by faith of the goſpel, ye might be renewed, and pardoned, and ſaved; though, I think, that the laſt, viz. eternal life and ſalvation, is principally, though not ſolely intended; as will appear by comparing this place with theſe parallel texts: John iii. 15. That whoſoever believeth in him, ſhould not periſh, but have eternal life. And, verſe 36. He that believeth on the Son, hath everlaſting life. John v. 24. He that heareth my word, and believeth on him that ſent me, hath everlaſting life. 1 Peter i. 9. The end of your faith, even the ſalvation of your ſouls.

Thus I have, as briefly as I well could, explained to you the meaning of the words, which I have done the more fully, that you may ſee how theſe obſervations, which I ſhall raiſe from them, are contained in them. The obſervations are theſe:

Firſt, That writing is the way which the wiſdom of God hath pitched upon, as the ſtanding way to convey the knowledge of the goſpel to the world. Theſe things are written.

Secondly, That all things neceſſary to be believed, in order to ſalvation, are contained in the goſpel. Theſe things are written, that ye might believe, and believing might have life; but if any thing neceſſary to be believed by Chriſtians, in order to eternal ſalvation, were omitted, then the goſpel would be written to no purpoſe, and would fail in the end for which it was written.

Thirdly, That the miracles related in the goſpel are a proper and ſufficient means or argument, to bring men to Chriſtian faith. For this is the narroweſt and moſt re-ſtrained ſenſe in which we can take the words: Theſe things, that is, theſe miracles, are written, that ye might believe, &c. Now, if St John, by the Spirit of God, did record miracles to this end, we may conclude that they are proper and ſufficient for this end.

Fourthly, That a credible hiſtory does give men ſufficient aſſurance of matter of fact, and ſuch as we may ſafely build a divine faith upon. For if theſe miracles were recorded for this end, that men might believe, then a credible hiſtory or relation that ſuch miracles were done, is ſufficient to aſſure us that ſuch miracles were wrought; and upon this aſſurance we may build our faith: otherwiſe, it had been in vain to have recorded theſe miracles to this end.

Fifthly, That we are not, now-a-days, deſtitute of a ſufficient ground of faith; becauſe we have theſe writings credibly conveyed to us, which contain the doctrine of the goſpel, and the relation of the miracles written for the confirmation of it.

Sixthly, That men, now-a-days, thoſe to whom the goſpel comes, are under an obligation to believe; or, which is all one, that, now-a-days, men may be guilty of ſuch a ſin as unbelief: for, now-a-days, we may have ſufficient grounds of faith.

Seventhly, That, to believe that Jeſus is the Chriſt, the Son of God, is truly and properly Chriſtian faith. This is the deſcription which is here given of it, that it is a believing, that Jeſus is the Chriſt, the Son of God.

Eighthly, That, to believe that Jeſus is the Chriſt, the Son of God, is truly and properly ſanctifying, and juſtifying, and ſaving faith; by this faith we have life. Theſe things are written, that ye might believe that Jeſus is the Chriſt, the Son of God; and that believing, ye might have life through his name.

Theſe obſervations are all virtually contained in the words. The greateſt part of them I ſhall very lightly paſs paſs over, and ſpeak but briefly to them, becauſe I intend mainly to inſiſt upon the two laſt; in the handling of which, I ſhall open to you the nature of Chriſtian faith, and ſhew you, that the faith which is here deſcribed, is that which is truly and properly juſtifying and ſaving.

Firſt, That writing is the way which the wiſdom of God hath pitched upon, as the ſtanding way of conveying the knowledge of the goſpel to the world. This is matter of fact, and for the proof of it we have the evidence of the thing. The goſpel de facto was written, and this writing is conveyed down to us, and is the inſtrument which God hath, in all ages ſince the Apoſtles times, that is, ſince the eye and ear witneſſes of the miracles of Chriſt and his doctrine ceaſed, made uſe of to convey to the world the knowledge of the goſpel. And here it were proper to ſhew what advantage this way of conveyance of the goſpel hath above oral tradition: but that I have already done in ſome former diſcourſes *, where I ſhewed at large, that this way of conveyance is a more univerſal and diffuſive, a more certain, and liable to leſs impoſture and falſification, a more equal and uniform, and a more human way of conveyance than oral tradition; ſo that I ſhall not inſiſt longer upon this.

Secondly, That all things neceſſary to be believed by Chriſtians, in order to ſalvation, are contained in the written goſpel: or elſe, how could St John in reaſon ſay, that theſe things were written, to this end, that men might believe, and be ſaved, if theſe things be not ſufficient to this end? which certainly they are not, if any thing neceſſary to be believed, in order to ſalvation, be left out. The Papiſts being urged with this text, to prove the ſufficiency of the written word, in oppoſition to thoſe traditional doctrines which they pretend to be neceſſary, over and beſides the written word, tell us, that St John doth not here ſpeak of the doctrine of Chriſt, but only of his miracles; theſe were written to confirm our faith of the Meſſias; but the doctrine of Chriſt was not all written, but left to the Apoſtles, to be delivered by mouth to their ſucceſſors, and ſo down to poſterity.

But I have ſhewn before, that the neceſſary doctrines of the goſpel, as well as the miracles, are comprehended in theſe things which St John ſays were written. Beſides that, it will be very hard for any man to deviſe a convenient reaſon, why miracles, as well as doctrines, might not have been left to the Apoſtles, to have been traditionally delivered down to poſterity without writing. For doctrines may as well be committed to writing, as relations of miracles: and miracles may be, with as much eaſe and certainty, and convenience in all reſpects, delivered down to poſterity by an oral tradition, as doctrines may.

Thirdly, That the miracles related in the goſpel are a proper and ſufficient means to bring men to Chriſtian faith. That they are ſo, it is a good ſign that God did work them to this end, and afterwards commit them to writing for this very reaſon, that the knowledge of them might be conveyed to poſterity, and there might ſtill remain in the world a proper and ſufficient argument to perſuade men to believe; and we may well imagine, that God would not do any thing but what is very proper and ſufficient for its end. Now, that miracles were wrought by the divine power purpoſely to this end, and that they are in reaſon a very ſufficient atteſtation to a perſon, and confirmation of the doctrine which he brings, I have largely ſhewn elſewhere *; and that, all along, both in the Old and New Teſtament, God did impower Moſes and the Prophets, Chriſt and his Apoſtles, to work miracles, to bring men to faith; and that this was the principal argument whereby thoſe who did believe were wrought upon.

Fourthly, That credible hiſtory doth give men ſufficient aſſurance of matter of fact; and ſuch aſſurance as we may ſafely build a divine faith upon. We freely believe innumerable things which are ſaid to have been done many ages before we were born, and make not the leaſt doubt of them, only upon the credit of hiſtory: ſo that, if the relation of miracles be but granted to be a credible hiſtory, we may, upon the credit of the relation, ſafely believe that ſuch miracles were wrought; and, if ſuch miracles racles were wrought, we may safely believe the doctrine to be from God, for the confirmation of which they were wrought; and, consequently, a divine faith may be safely built upon such an assurance of miracles, as we may have from a credible history and relation.

Fifthly, That we are not, now-a-days, destitute of a sufficient ground of faith; because the doctrine of the gospel hath still the same confirmation that it had, viz. miracles: only, we who live at this distance from the time when, and the place where, they were wrought, have the knowledge of them conveyed to us, and come to be assured of them in another way. Those who lived in the age of Christ and his Apostles, had assurance of miracles from their own senses: and we are now assured of them by credible history and relation. Now, though these ways be not equal, yet they are both sufficient to beget in us an undoubted assurance, and such as no prudent man hath any reason to doubt of. For a man may be as truly and undoubtedly certain, that is, as well satisfied, that a thing was done, from the credit of history, as from his own senses. I make no more doubt whether there was such a person as Henry the Eighth King of England, than I do whether I be in this place.

Sixthly, That, now-a-days, those to whom the gospel comes, are under an obligation to believe; or that, now-a-days, there is such a sin as unbelief of the gospel. And I the rather note this, because there are some well-wishers to atheism, who, out of prudence and regard to their own safety, chuse rather secretly to undermine religion, than openly to deny it. I grant, indeed, that, in our Saviour's time, when such great miracles were wrought, those who saw those miracles, which they think no body did, were under an obligation to believe, and guilty of a great sin in not believing the gospel: but, now-a-days, when we see no such miracles wrought for the confirmation of the gospel, there lies no obligation upon any man to believe it; and that now there is no such sin as unbelief. Now, any man may, with half an eye, see the consequence of this assertion: for, being once admitted, it doth as certainly destroy Christian religion, as if men should deny that there was any such person as Jesus Christ, or that he ever wrought any miracles; for, if to diſbelieve the goſpel be no ſin, and, conſequently, brings a man into no danger; but, on the other hand, dangers and perſecutions do attend the belief and profeſſion of it, it were the greateſt folly in the world for any man to believe; unleſs this poſſibly may be greater, for a man who does believe it, not to obey and live according to it. And if this were true, it were the greateſt imprudence that can be, for any man to be a Chriſtian. And if that were once admitted, there is all the reaſon in the world that Chriſtianity ſhould be baniſhed and extirpated; not only as uſeleſs and impertinent, but as a thing dangerous and pernicious to the welfare of mankind.

I ſhall therefore briefly prove to you, that it is now one of the greateſt ſins that men are capable of (except the ſin againſt the Holy Ghoſt) for thoſe who have the goſpel ſufficiently propounded to them, to diſbelieve it; I ſay, except the ſin againſt the Holy Ghoſt, which, our Saviour tells us, was blaſpheming the Spirit of God, whereby he wrought his miracles, and ſaying it was the ſpirit of the devil; and this ſin, men, in a lower degree and proportion, may now-a-days be guilty of: for as the Phariſees, who ſaw the works that Chriſt did, and acknowledged them to be miracles, did commit the ſin againſt the Holy Ghoſt, in aſcribing thoſe miracles, which were really wrought by the power of the Holy Ghoſt, to the power of the devil; ſo men now-a-days, who own the hiſtory of Chriſt's miracles as true, may be guilty of the ſin againſt the Holy Ghoſt, in a lower proportion, by maliciouſly imputing thoſe miracles to the power of the devil.

But, excepting the ſin againſt the Holy Ghoſt, the greateſt ſin that men are now capable of, is to diſbelieve the goſpel, when it is ſufficiently propounded to them. Now, the goſpel is then ſufficiently propounded, when there are ſufficient grounds offered to perſuade men to the belief of it; and I have already proved, that we now have ſufficient ground to believe the goſpel; and, if ſo, then, whoſoever hath theſe grounds offered to him, is under an obligation to believe it: for every man is bound to believe that for which he hath ſufficient ground and reaſon:

and every man ſins who neglects his duty, that is, does not do that which he ſtands bound to do.

And not only whoever diſbelieves the goſpel, ſins in ſo doing, but, further, he commits the greateſt ſin that now men are capable of. I ſay, now capable of; for I doubt not but that it was a ſin of a higher degree, for thoſe who ſaw Chriſt's miracles to diſbelieve, than it is for us, who have only the relation of them. For, by the ſame reaſon, that he is more bleſſed that believes, and hath not ſeen; a greater curſe belongs to him, who hath ſeen, and yet doth not believe; and, conſequently, ſuch a perſon is guilty of a greater ſin. But, becauſe we cannot now ſee the miracles of Chriſt, the greateſt ſin that men in this age are capable of, is to diſbelieve the goſpel confirmed by miracles, whereof we are aſſured by credible relation. For the ſin of diſbelieving hath now theſe two aggravations:

1. It is a ſin againſt ſufficient light and evidence; and in this it is equal to the ſins which are committed againſt natural light.

2. It is a ſin againſt the greateſt mercies and bleſſings that ever were offered to the world; and in this it exceeds the ſins againſt natural light. Whoever diſbelieves the goſpel, he rejects the offer of eternal life and happineſs. And theſe two aggravations the Apoſtle puts together, Heb. ii. 3. How ſhall we eſcape, if we neglect ſo great ſalvation, which at the firſt began to be ſpoken by the Lord, and was confirmed unto us by them that heard him? And if this be thus, it highly concerns us to enquire into the nature of this faith; and this brings me to the Seventh Obſervation, That, to believe that Jeſus is the Chriſt, the Son of God, is truly and properly Chriſtian faith. But the conſideration of this I ſhall leave to the next opportunity.

SERMON CCXXVI.

JOHN XX. 31.

But theſe are written, that ye might believe that Jeſus is the Chriſt, the Son of God, and that believing ye might have life through his name.

The ſecond ſermon on this text.

IN my former diſcourſe upon theſe words, I propoſed eight obſervations from them, ſix of which I have already diſpatched, deſigning to diſcourſe of the remaining two more at large. I proceed therefore to the Seventh obſervation which I laid down, viz. That, to believe that Jeſus is the Chriſt, the Son of God, is truly and properly Chriſtian faith. This is the deſcription which is here given of Chriſtian faith.

In proſecution of this, I ſhall do theſe two things:

Firſt, Shew you what is included in believing that Jeſus is the Chriſt, the Son of God.

Secondly, Prove that this is truly and properly Chriſtian faith.

Firſt, What is included in believing that Jeſus is the Chriſt, the Son of God? It ſignifies a firm and effectual perſuaſion, that Jeſus, that is, the perſon the hiſtory of whoſe life and death is related in the goſpel, is the Chriſt, that is, the true Meſſias, promiſed and propheſied of in the Old Teſtament to be the Saviour of the world; and that he is the Son of God, that is, the only begotten of the Father, who was ſent by him into the world, and took our nature upon him, that he might purchaſe eternal happineſs pineſs for us, and inſtruct us, and go before us in the way to it. So that faith is a firm and effectual perſuaſion of, or aſſent to the whole goſpel. Faith ſignifies Chriſtian religion, which comprehends an aſſent to the doctrines of the goſpel, and a ſuitable life and converſation.

I ſay, a firm perſuaſion of this; for, in the phraſe of the New Teſtament, none are accounted true believers, or ſaid to have a true faith in Chriſt, who do not firmly continue in this perſuaſion; and the owning and profeſſion of it, notwithſtanding all the ſufferings and perſecutions it might expoſe them to. And an effectual perſuaſion, for none are ſaid truly to believe in Chriſt, who do not ſhew forth the proper and genuine effects of this faith, who do not live as they believe, and conform their lives to that doctrine, to the truth whereof they profeſs an aſſent.

And hence it is, that true Chriſtians, that is, thoſe who did faſhion their lives according to the goſpel, are called Believers, and the ſum of all Chriſtianity is uſually contained in this word believing, which is the great principle of a Chriſtian life; as, in the Old Teſtament, all religion is expreſſed by the faith of God; ſo, in the New, by faith in Chriſt.

Now, whoſoever doth firmly and effectually entertain this truth, that that Jeſus, whom the goſpel declares to us, is the true Meſſias, and Saviour of the world, and the very Son of God, ſent by him into the world for this purpoſe, that he might, by his doctrine, inſtruct, and, by the example of his life, go before us in the way to eternal happineſs, and, by the merit and ſatisfaction of his death and ſufferings, appeaſe and reconcile God to men, and purchaſe for them the pardon of their ſins and eternal life, upon the conditions of faith, and repentance, and ſincere obedience; I ſay, whoſoever doth firmly and effectually entertain theſe truths, will conſequently endeavour to obey the precepts of his doctrine, and to imitate the example of his life, and will expect ſalvation, that is, the pardon of his ſins, and eternal life, from no other; becauſe he is verily perſuaded he is a teacher, and a Saviour ſent from God, that his doctrine is true, and his ſatisfaction available, and that the rewards which he hath promiſed to thoſe who believe and obey him, and the puniſhments which he hath threatened to the unbelievers and diſobedient, ſhall all certainly be fulfilled and accompliſhed. All this is included in believing that Jeſus is the Chriſt, the Son of God. So Chriſtian faith, or the faith of the goſpel, contains plainly in it theſe particulars:

1. An aſſent of the underſtanding to this truth, that Jeſus Chriſt, the Son of God, was a perſon commiſſioned from heaven, and employed by God to bring men to eternal happineſs. And this fundamental is neceſſary to all the ſubſequent acts of faith, and that upon which they depend.

2. An aſſent of the underſtanding to the truth of all thoſe things which this perſon delivered to the world. So that, if he tells us, that his death hath made expiation for the ſins of men, upon the conditions of faith, and repentance, and obedience, and that God, by him, doth command the world to do ſuch and ſuch things, and, in caſe of obedience, will confer ſuch and ſuch rewards upon men, but, in caſe of diſobedience, will inflict ſuch puniſhments upon them; we are to believe all this to be true; becauſe the perſon who acquainted us with thoſe things was ſent by God, and employed from heaven upon this meſſage.

3. And, conſequently, a relying and depending upon him, and no other, for the conferring of theſe benefits, and making good theſe promiſes to us.

4. Obedience to all his laws and commands; becauſe, believing them to be from God, we cannot but aſſent to them as good, and as laying an obligation upon us to yield obedience to them; and if we do not obey them, we are preſumed to diſbelieve them; for, if we did truly and heartily believe them to be the commands of God, we would obey them.

Now, that obedience of heart and life to the precepts and commands of the goſpel, as well as an aſſent of the underſtanding to the truth of the goſpel-revelation, and a truſting and relying upon the merits of Chriſt, is included in the ſcripture notion of faith, will evidently appear to any that will conſider theſe texts. Rom. i. 5. By whom we have received grace and apoſtleſhip for obedience to the faith among all nations for his name; where the belief of the goſpel is called the obedience of faith, Rom. x. 16. But they have not all obeyed the goſpel, for Eſaias ſaith, Lord, who hath believed our report? But if faith doth not include obedience, how could he prove that there were ſome that did not obey the goſpel, becauſe Iſaiah ſaid, there were ſome that did not believe it? And ſo likewiſe by comparing 1 Tim. iv. 10. where he is ſaid to be the ſaviour of them that believe, with Heb. v. 9. where he is ſaid to be the author of eternal ſalvation unto all them that obey him. As alſo by comparing Gal. v. 6. where it is ſaid, For in Jeſus Chriſt, neither circumciſion availeth any thing, nor uncircumciſion; but faith which worketh by love; with 1 Cor. vii. 19. Circumciſion is nothing, and uncircumciſion is nothing; but the keeping of the commandments of God. And ſo likewiſe by thoſe texts, where unbelief and diſobedience are equivalently uſed. I will but mention one, Heb. iii. 12. The Apoſtle, from the example of the Iſraelites, cautions Chriſtians againſt unbelief: Take heed, brethren, leſt there be in any of you an evil heart of unbelief, in departing from the living God. And repeating the ſame caution in the next chapter, at the 11th verſe, he varies the phraſe a little, Leſt any man fall after the ſame example of diſobedience; the word is ἀπειθείας, which indeed our tranſlators render unbelief, but that confirms that which I bring it for, that diſobedience and unbelief are the ſame. And ſo likewiſe we find faith and diſobedience oppoſed frequently in ſcripture. John iii. 36. He that believeth on the Son, hath everlaſting life: and he that believeth not the Son, ſhall not ſee life. In the Greek it is, he that obeyeth not the Son, as you will ſee in the margin of the Bible. 1 Peter ii. 7. Unto you therefore which believe he is precious: but unto them which be diſobedient, the ſtone which the builders diſallowed, the ſame is made the head of the corner. And this doth likewiſe appear in all thoſe texts, wherein repentance, and our forgiving of others, and ſeveral other acts of obedience, are made the conditions of our juſtification; or the omiſſion of them, ſins, as well as faith. So that we cannot be ſaid to be juſtified by faith alone, unleſs that faith include in it obedience.

I have inſiſted the longer upon this, becauſe the right underſtanding the ſcripture-notion of faith in Chriſt, doth very much depend upon this: and if this one thing, that the ſcripture-notion of faith doth include in it obedience to the precepts of the goſpel, were but well underſtood and conſidered, it would ſilence and put an end to thoſe infinite controverſies about faith and juſtification, which have ſo much troubled the Chriſtian world, to the great prejudice of practical religion, and holineſs of life.

Secondly, That this is truly and properly Chriſtian faith. Which I ſhall prove by theſe two arguments:

1. Becauſe it includes a belief of the whole goſpel, or of all the revelation which God hath made to the world by Jeſus Chriſt. And, certainly, there cannot be a more proper notion of Chriſtian faith, than to believe the revelation which God hath made by Jeſus Chriſt: but to believe that Jeſus is the Chriſt, the Son of God, doth include this. For whoſoever believes him to be the Meſſias, and the Son of God, believes him to have come from God, and to be authoriſed and commiſſioned by him to make known his mind to the world, and, conſequently, will believe whatever he delivers. For whoever believes the goodneſs and veracity of God, as every man does that believes a God, cannot but aſſent to the truth of every thing which he is ſatisfied comes from God.

2. That, to believe that Jeſus is the Chriſt, the Son of God, is truly and properly Chriſtian faith, or the faith of the goſpel, will appear, by conſidering how the ſcriptures of the New Teſtament do conſtantly deſcribe to us the faith of the goſpel; and you ſhall find they do it, either by the very phraſe in the text, or other phraſes and metaphors equivalent to them, or elſe, by a belief of that which is the great argument and confirmation of Chriſt's being the Meſſias, the Son of God. Very often the faith of the goſpel is deſcribed by the very phraſe in the text, believing that Jeſus is the Chriſt, and that he is the Son of God. John iv. 41, 42. And many more believed becauſe of his own word; and ſaid unto the woman, Now we believe, not becauſe of thy ſaying: for we have heard him ourſelves, and know that this is indeed the Chriſt, the Saviour of the world. John vi. 69.

69. And we believe, and are ſure, that thou art that Chriſt, the Son of the living God. John xi. 27. ſays Martha to Chriſt, Yea, Lord, I believe that thou art the Chriſt, the Son of God, which ſhould come into the world. Acts viii. 37. I believe that Jeſus Chriſt is the Son of God. 1 John iii. 23. And this is his commandment, that we ſhould believe on the name of his Son Jeſus Chriſt, and love one another, as he gave us commandment; that is, that we ſhould believe on him under this name and title of Jeſus Chriſt the Son of God. 1 John v. 1. Whoſoever believeth that Jeſus is the Chriſt, is born of God. And ver. 5. Who is he that overcometh the world, but he that believeth that Jeſus is the Son of God? And ver. 10. He that believeth on the Son of God, that is, believeth Jeſus to be the Son of God. And ver. 13. Theſe things have I written unto you that believe on the name of the Son of God, that ye may know that ye have eternal life, and that ye may believe on the name of the Son of God.

Sometimes the faith of the goſpel is deſcribed to us by other phraſes that are tantamount to theſe; ſuch as ſignify that he came from God, and was ſent by him into the world, and was the Meſſias whom they expected. John iii. 2. Nicodemus deſcribes his faith in Chriſt thus, I know that thou art a teacher come from God, John vi. 29. This is the work of God, that ye believe on him whom he hath ſent, that is, that ye believe me to be ſent from God. John viii. 24. For if ye believe not I am he, ye ſhall die in your ſins; that is, if ye believe not that I am the Meſſias, whom you expect and look for. And ſo John xiii. 19. That ye may believe that I am he. And John xi. 42. That they may believe that thou haſt ſent me. And John xvi. 30. By this we believe that thou cameſt forth from God. And John xvii. 8. They have believed that thou didſt ſend me.

Sometimes the faith of the goſpel is expreſſed by metaphors equivalent to theſe expreſſions; as by coming to Chriſt, and receiving him as the true Meſſias, in ſeveral places; and ſometimes by believing that which is the great argument and confirmation that Chriſt was the true Meſſias, the Son of God, that is, believing his reſurrection from the dead. Rom. iv. 24. To whom it ſhall be imputed for righteouſneſs, if we believe on him that raiſed up Jeſus our Lord from the dead. Rom. x. 9. If thou ſhalt confeſs with thy mouth the Lord Jeſus, and ſhalt believe in thine heart, that God hath raiſed him from the dead, thou ſhalt be ſaved. Col. ii. 12. Through the faith of the operation of God, who raiſed him up from the dead. Where faith is deſcribed by a belief of the power whereby Chriſt was raiſed from the dead. And, to mention no more, 1 Pet. i. 21. Who by him do believe in God, that raiſed him up from the dead. Now, the reaſon why the faith of the goſpel is deſcribed by the belief of Chriſt's reſurrection, is, becauſe whoever believes that Chriſt was raiſed from the dead, cannot but be ſatisfied, that this great miracle was a ſufficient atteſtation that he was no impoſtor, but that he was what he pretended to be, viz. the Son of God; and conſequently that he ought to be believed and obeyed in all things. And thus much may ſuffice to have ſpoken to this ſeventh obſervation.

Eighth obſervation, That to believe that Jeſus is the Chriſt, the Son of God, is truly and properly ſanctifying, and juſtifying, and ſaving faith. So the text tells us, that this faith gives us life: But theſe are written, that ye might believe that Jeſus is the Chriſt, the Son of God; and that believing ye might have life through his name; that is, as I explained this phraſe in the opening of the text, that upon theſe terms and conditions ye might be made partakers of all thoſe bleſſings and benefits, which Chriſt, the Saviour of the world, hath purchaſed, which are here ſet forth under the name of life; it being uſual in the phraſe of ſcripture to ſet forth to us thoſe things which are moſt excellent and deſirable, by life, which men value above all other things. Now, the principal benefits which Chriſt hath purchaſed, and which we are ſaid to be made partakers of by believing, are,

1. Regeneration; under which I include the continuance and progreſs of this work, which is ſanctification.

2. Juſtification; by which I cannot find that the ſcripture means any more than pardon or remiſſion of ſins.

3. Eternal

3. Eternal life; and this I think is principally, though not ſolely intended here in the text, as I have ſhewn, by comparing the text with other parallel texts in the ſame evangeliſt. John iii. 15. That whoſoever believeth in him, ſhould not periſh, but have eternal life. And ver. 36. He that believeth on the Son, hath everlaſting life. I ſay, I think eternal life is here principally intended, though this ſuppoſe the other, regeneration, and juſtification, before we can attain it, which may alſo very well be included here in the term life. My reaſons are theſe:

1. Becauſe I find in ſcripture, that regeneration and juſtification are expreſſed by the name of life. Rom. vi. 4. our regeneration is called newneſs of life, becauſe before we were dead in ſins and treſpaſſes; and Rom. v. 18. juſtification is called juſtification of life, becauſe while our ſins are unpardoned, and we are under the ſentence of condemnation, we are dead in law; but being juſtified and pardoned, we are, as it were, reſtored to life again.

2. Becauſe in the phraſe of ſcripture we are ſaid to be regenerate, and ſanctified, and juſtified by faith, as well as ſaved. 1 John v. 1. He that believeth that Jeſus is the Chriſt, is born of God. Gal. ii. 20. The life which I now live in the fleſh, I live by the faith of the Son of God; ſpeaking of the new life of ſanctification. And Col. ii. we are ſaid to be riſen with Chriſt, that is, born to a new life, by the faith of the operation of God, that raiſed up Jeſus from the dead; and to be juſtfied by faith, in innumerable places. So that it is very probable upon theſe accounts, that the evangeliſt here, when he ſays, that believing you might have life in his name, doth intend to take in regeneration and juſtification, as well as eternal life, which is the conſummation of all the bleſſings of the goſpel, I come now to the obſervation, viz.

That this faith of the goſpel, which I have deſcribed, is truly and properly a ſanctifying, and juſtifying, and ſaving faith.

I. I ſhall ſhew that it is properly a ſanctifying faith.

II. A juſtifying and ſaving faith.

I. It is truly ſanctifying. I know that this term of a ſanctifying faith is not much in uſe among divines, and therefore it may ſeem a little more ſtrange: but they might have uſed it if they had pleaſed, for it is every whit as proper to call faith ſanctifying, as juſtifying, or ſaving. It is true indeed, this expreſs term of a ſanctifying faith is no where in ſcripture; no more are the very terms of juſtifying and ſaving faith: but we are ſaid to be juſtified and ſaved by faith in ſcripture, which is as much as if the terms had been uſed. And we are ſaid alſo to be ſanctified by faith, as well as juſtified and ſaved. Acts xv. 9. our hearts are ſaid to be purified by faith. And ſo likewiſe, our victory over the world, that is, our conquering and ſubduing of our covetous, and ambitious, and ſenſual luſts and deſires, are in a peculiar manner aſcribed to this faith, which I have deſcribed. 1 John v. 4, 5. This is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith. Who is he that overcometh the world, but he that believeth that Jeſus is the Son of God?

II. That this faith is truly and properly juſtifying and ſaving faith. I put theſe, juſtification and ſalvation, together, partly becauſe they are of the ſame conſideration, as to the influence which faith hath upon them; and the latter follows upon the former; for if we be juſtified by faith, that is, have our ſins pardoned, by the ſame act of faith we are ſaved from hell, and, conſequently, made capable of eternal life; I ſay, by the very ſame act of faith that we obtain the pardon of our ſins, we are ſaved from hell, that is, the puniſhment due to ſin; for pardon removes the guilt, and guilt is nothing elſe but an obligation to puniſhment: and partly becauſe I find the ſcripture uſeth them promiſcuouſly. When St James diſputes about juſtification by faith, he uſeth the term of being ſaved by faith, James ii. 14. Can faith ſave him? Sometimes of being juſtified, ver. 24. So that a man is not juſtified by faith only.

In ſpeaking to this propoſition, that the faith of the goſpel, which I have deſcribed, is properly juſtifying and ſaving faith, I ſhall do theſe ſix things:

1. Shew that juſtification in ſcripture ſignifies no more than the pardon and remiſſion of ſins.

2. That faith can in no propriety of language be ſaid to be the inſtrument of our pardon.

3. That

3. That the influence that the faith of the goſpel, which I have deſcribed, hath upon the pardon of ſin, is this, that it is the whole and entire condition required on our parts, upon the performance of which God hath promiſed to pardon our ſins, and to ſave us.

4. That the ſcripture, where it treats of juſtification by faith, ſpeaks of this faith which I have deſcribed, and no other.

5. That no metaphorical deſcriptions of juſtifying faith are allowable, any further than as they ſerve to illuſtrate and make clear the plain and ſimple notion of the thing. For if metaphors once come to be inſiſted on, and ſtrained, and conſequences come to be drawn from them, and doctrines founded, and theories built upon them, they are of very ill conſequence, and ſerve to no other purpoſe but to blind and obſcure the plain and ſimple notions of things, and to ſeduce and miſlead the underſtandings of men, and to multiply controverſies without end.

And I the rather take notice of this abuſe of metaphors upon this ſubject, becauſe I do not know any other head of divinity which hath ſuffered ſo much by them as the doctrine of juſtifying faith; whereby the plain truth hath been very much obſcured, and occaſion miniſtred to many endleſs diſputes.

6. That if this plain and ſimple notion of juſtifying faith were admitted, it would ſuperſede all thoſe controverſies about juſtification, which have ſo much troubled the church. Theſe particulars I ſhall by God's aſſiſtance ſpeak to, not out of a mind to oppoſe and contradict others; (what a pitiful deſign is that! and how much below one that is to ſpeak to men, in the name and fear of God!) but out of a hearty deſire to bring the truth to light, and to contribute ſomething to the clearing of that, which is of ſo great importance and concernment to Chriſtian religion.

1. That juſtification of a ſinner in ſcripture ſignifies no more than the pardon of ſin. That there are ſeveral acceptations of the word juſtification in the New Teſtament, I deny not. Sometimes it ſignifies approbation in general of a thing, or perſon. So the word is uſed, Luke vii. 29. And all the people that heard him, and the publicans, justified God, being baptized with the baptism of John. Justified God; how is that? that is, they approved and followed his counsel, as appears evidently by the opposition in the next words; But the Pharisees and lawyers rejected the counsel of God against themselves, being not baptized of him. Those that rejected the counsel of God, are opposed to those that justified God. And so at ver. 35. But wisdom is justified of her children, that is, is approved. And so very probably it may be understood in the parable of the Pharisee and the publican, I tell you, this man went down to his house justified rather than the other; that is, of the two, God did rather approve of his humble carriage, than the Pharisee's proud and insolent behaviour. Sometimes it signifies any proof or declaration of a thing. So Rom. iii. 4. Let God be true, but every man a liar; as it is written, That thou mightst be justified in thy sayings, and mightst overcome when thou art judged; that is, that all thy words or promises might be proved and declared to be true, and that thou mayst prevail whenever thou art impleaded by men of unfaithfulness and unrighteousness. And so 1 Tim. iii. 16. Christ is said to be justified in the Spirit; that is, by the testimony of the Spirit concerning him; as also by the miracles which he wrought by the Holy Ghost, and the miraculous gifts of the Spirit which were poured forth on the apostles, he was proved and declared to be the true Messias, and the Son of God. And this phrase of Christ's being justified by the Spirit, seems to be of the same sense with that expression, Rom. i. 4. Declared to be the Son of God with power, according to the Spirit of holiness, by the resurrection from the dead; that is, he was evidently proved to be the Son of God, by the great miracle of his resurrection, which was wrought by the power of the Holy Ghost. But most frequently, to justify in scripture, signifies to pardon.

Thus the word justify doth signify variously, according to the subject or matter it is applied to: but when it is applied to a sinner, it signifies nothing else but pardon of his sin. Nor can I possibly apprehend what other notion men can frame to themselves of a sinner's being justified, distinct from pardon and remission.

Indeed,

Indeed, if a perſon be not really guilty, that is, unjuſtly accuſed of a crime, he may be ſaid to be juſtified, when he is cleared from the charge and accuſation which is brought againſt him: but if a man be guilty, he cannot otherwiſe be ſaid to be juſtified than by having the guilt removed; that is, by being pardoned. And that the ſcripture underſtands the ſame thing by juſtification, and pardon, or remiſſion of ſins, is, I think, very evident from theſe two texts, Acts xiii. 38, 39. That through this man is preached unto you the forgiveneſs of ſins; that is, in and through Jeſus Chriſt, the way of pardon and forgiveneſs is declared; and by him, all that believe are juſtified from all things, from which ye could not be juſtified by the law of Moſes; that is, according to this declaration, all that do believe, are by him, that is, by the virtue of his ſacrifice, acquitted and cleared from the guilt of all thoſe ſins, for which there was no way of expiation provided by the law of Moſes, that is, of preſumptuous ſins, for which there was no ſacrifice, but the man was to be cut off. Now, if the meaning of this text be this, that in and through Chriſt the way of pardon and forgiveneſs is declared, and accordingly all that do believe in him are pardoned, then to be juſtified and pardoned are all one in this place; but this is the meaning of the text, if by the phraſe of being juſtified from all things, from which we could not be juſtified by the law of Moſes, be meant the pardoning of ſuch ſins and tranſgreſſions, for which by the law of Moſes there was no way of expiation; but this muſt of neceſſity be the meaning of this phraſe; for what are thoſe things, from which it is ſaid, we could not be juſtified by the law of Moſes, but ſinful tranſgreſſions and violations of the law? and how can a man be ſaid to be juſtified from any ſin and tranſgreſſion, otherwiſe than by the pardon and forgiveneſs of it? The other text is Rom. iv. 6, 7, 8. Even as David alſo deſcribeth the bleſſedneſs of the man, unto whom God imputeth righteouſneſs without works, ſaying, Bleſſed are they whoſe iniquities are forgiven, and whoſe ſins are covered; bleſſed is the man to whom the Lord will not impute ſin. The man unto whom God imputeth righteouſneſs, is the man whom God juſtifies. Now, how does David deſcribe the bleſſedneſs ſedneſs of the man whom God juſtifies? Thus, Bleſſed is the man whoſe iniquities are forgiven, and whoſe ſins are covered, which is a metaphorical expreſſion of the ſame thing, covering of ſin being the pardoning of it. From whence I reaſon, if according to the Apoſtle, thoſe propoſitions be equivalent, Bleſſed is the man whoſe iniquities are forgiven, and, Bleſſed is the man whom God juſtifies, then, according to the Apoſtle, juſtification and forgiveneſs of ſins are all one: but thoſe propoſitions are equivalent, if the Apoſtle cite the text out of the Pſalms pertinently.

2. That faith can in no tolerable propriety of language be ſaid to be the inſtrument of our pardon, and conſequently not of our juſtification. An inſtrument is ſomething ſubordinate to the principal efficient cauſe, and made uſe of by it to produce the effect; and this in natural and artificial cauſes may be underſtood; but what notion to have of a moral inſtrument, I confeſs I am at a loſs. But to bring the buſineſs out of the clouds, we may thus conceive of the pardon of ſin. God, in the goſpel, hath entered into a covenant of grace and mercy with ſinners; one of the benefits promiſed by God in the covenant, is pardon of ſin. The conditions upon which we ſhall be made partakers of the benefit, are comprehended in this one word, faith, which ſignifies the whole of the Chriſtian religion, viz. ſuch an effectual aſſent to the revelation of the goſpel, as doth produce repentance, and ſincere obedience, and a truſt and confidence in Chriſt alone for ſalvation. The procuring or meritorious cauſe of this benefit, viz. the pardon of our ſins, is the death of Chriſt, which is called his blood or ſacrifice. The principal efficient cauſe of our pardon is God, in the ſentence of the law, or, which is all one, in the tenor of this covenant, declaring us pardoned upon theſe terms and conditions. Now, how can faith, which is an act on our parts, and the condition to be performed by us, be ſaid to be an inſtrument in the hand of God of our pardon? unleſs men will think fit to call a condition an inſtrument, which, I think, no propriety of language will allow.

I ſhould now proceed to the third particular which I propoſed, but ſhall refer that to my next diſcourſe on this argument.

SER-

SERMON CCXXVII.

Of juſtifying faith.

JOHN XX. 31.

But theſe are written, that ye might believe that Jeſus is the Chriſt, the Son of God, and that believing ye might have life through his name.

The third ſermon on this text.

THE obſervation I am diſcourſing upon is this, That to believe that Jeſus is the Chriſt, the Son of God, is truly and properly ſanctifying, and juſtifying, and ſaving faith. I have entered upon the latter part of the obſervation, viz. to ſhew that this is truly and properly juſtifying and ſaving faith. In ſpeaking to which, I propoſed to ſhew ſix things.

1. That juſtification in ſcripture ſignifies no more but the pardon and remiſſion of ſins.

2. That faith can in no propriety of language be ſaid to be the inſtrument of our pardon. Thus far I have gone, and now proceed to what remains, viz. to ſhew,

3. That the influence which faith hath upon the pardon of ſin, is this, that it is the whole and entire condition, required in the goſpel, of our pardon, upon the performance of which God hath promiſed to pardon ſin; which appears thus: All the conditions the goſpel require on our part, in order to pardon, may be reduced to theſe four heads:

(1.) An aſſent to the truth of the goſpel.

(2.) A truſt and confidence in Chriſt as our only Saviour.

(3.) Repentance from dead works.

(4. Sincere obedience and holineſs of life. But I have already proved at large, that all theſe are comprehended prehended in the New-Teſtament notion of faith, which ſignifies the whole of Chriſtian religion. And that repentance and obedience are conditions of our pardon, and conſequently of our juſtification, appears from theſe texts: Acts iii. 19. Repent therefore, and be converted, that your ſins may be blotted out. Doth not this imply, that upon condition we do repent and be converted, God will pardon our ſins? 1 John i. 9. If we confeſs our ſins, (that is, with a reſolution to leave them; as it is ſaid elſewhere, he that confeſſeth and forſaketh his ſins) he is faithful and juſt to forgive us our ſins, and to cleanſe us from all unrighteouſneſs. Matth. vi. 14, 15. For if ye forgive men their treſpaſſes, your heavenly Father will alſo forgive you; but if ye forgive not men their treſpaſſes, neither will your Father forgive your treſpaſſes. And to the ſame purpoſe, Matth. xviii. 35. So likewiſe ſhall my heavenly Father do unto you, if ye from your hearts forgive not every one his brother their treſpaſſes. Luke vi. 37. Judge not, and ye ſhall not be judged; condemn not, and ye ſhall not be condemned; forgive, and ye ſhall be forgiven. Luke xi. 4. And forgive us our ſins; for we alſo forgive every one that is indebted to us. Where doth the ſcripture make any thing more plainly a condition of pardon than it here does our forgiving of others? upon condition of the performance whereof he promiſes to forgive us; and without which he threatens not to forgive us. I know not what a condition is, if it be not that which if we perform, we ſhall receive the benefit promiſed; if we do not, we ſhall fall ſhort of it.

4. That the ſcripture, where it ſpeaks of juſtification by faith, ſpeaks of this faith, and no other, of ſuch a faith as takes in the whole of Chriſtian religion. The principal places where the ſcripture deſignedly treats of juſtification by faith, are the third and fourth chapters of the epiſtles to the Romans, the ſecond and third to the Galatians; and the ſecond of St James. In the Romans and Galatians, St Paul doth plainly oppoſe faith to the law, and the righteouſneſs of it to the works of the law; and it will clearly appear to any one that will carefully read over theſe diſcourſes of St Paul's, that by faith is meant the diſpenſation of the goſpel, and by the law, the Moſaical adminiſtration; and the reſult of all thoſe diſcourſes is, that men are not juſtified by performing the works which the legal diſpenſation required; but by aſſenting and ſubmitting to the revelation of the goſpel. And this is agreeable to what he ſays, Acts xiii. 38, 39. Through this man is preached unto you forgiveneſs of ſins; and by him, all that believe are juſtified from all things from which ye could not be juſtified by the law of Moſes.

It is true likewiſe, that the Apoſtle, in the epiſtle to the Romans, doth not only diſpute againſt thoſe who ſimply contended for juſtification by the legal diſpenſation; but were fallen alſo into the groſs error and miſtake, that they did merit juſtification and pardon at God's hand, which is impoſſible; for pardon is free, and of grace, or elſe it is not pardon. Therefore the Apoſtle aſſerts, that we are ſo juſtified by faith, that neither our aſſent to the goſpel, nor our obedience to the commands of it, do merit this at God's hands; for this would directly contradict juſtification by the faith of the goſpel. For how can any man poſſibly think, that he merits pardon by his believing and obeying the goſpel, when this is part of the goſpel which we believe, that Chriſt died for our ſins, and purchaſed our pardon at ſo dear a rate? which had been very unjuſt, if we ourſelves could have done any thing to have merited it.

And that faith is taken for the revelation of the goſpel, in oppoſition to the legal adminiſtrations, will appear by conſidering theſe texts: Gal. iii. 23. But before faith came, we were kept under the law; by which the Apoſtle plainly means this, that before the revelation of the goſpel to the world, we were under the legal adminiſtration; for he adds afterwards, We were ſhut up unto the faith that ſhould afterwards be revealed; and what is the faith that ſhould afterwards be revealed, but the goſpel? which in the fulneſs of time was to be revealed to the world, till which time we were held under the diſpenſation of the law: and ver. 24. Wherefore the law was our ſchoolmaſter to bring us unto Chriſt, that we might be juſtified by faith: that is, the law was a diſcipline preparatory for the goſpel, that when that came, we might be juſtified by it: and ver 25. But after that faith is come, we are no longer under a ſchoolmaſter, that is, after the goſpel was revealed, we were ſet free from the ſevere and harſh diſpenſation of the law; and our aſſent and ſubmiſſion to that revelation, is that whereby we are ſaid to be juſtified, Rom. iii. 23. Even the righteouſneſs of God, which is by the faith of Jeſus Chriſt, that is, by the goſpel, unto all, and upon all them that believe. And ver. 26. That he might be juſt, and the juſtifier of him which believeth in Jeſus; τὸν ἐκ πίστεως Ἰησοῦ, the juſtifier of him that yields aſſent and ſubmiſſion to the goſpel of Chriſt. And this faith is ſaid to be imputed to us for righteouſneſs, chap. iv. 24. But for us alſo, to whom it ſhall be imputed, if we believe on him that raiſed up Jeſus our Lord from the dead; that is, if we aſſent and ſubmit to the revelation of the goſpel, which God hath confirmed by that eminent miracle of raiſing up Chriſt from the dead.

St James tells us moſt expreſly, that the faith which juſtifies doth contain obedience in it: and if it do not, it is dead, and falſe, and ineffectual to all purpoſes of pardon and ſalvation: and that if any man pretend to faith, and that faith be deſtitute of the proper and genuine effects of true faith, it will be unprofitable to him, and not at all avail to his juſtification and ſalvation. The ſum of his diſcourſe is, that the faith which juſtifies and ſaves us, muſt not only be a bare aſſent of the underſtanding to the truths of the goſpel; but muſt include in it obedience to all the commands of the goſpel; and if it does not, it does no more deſerve the name of faith, than good words to a man in want deſerve the name of charity. Chap. ii. ver. 14, 15, 16, 17. What doth it profit, my brethren, though a man ſay he hath faith, and hath not works? can faith ſave him? If a brother or ſiſter be naked, and deſtitute of daily food: and one of you ſay unto them, Depart in peace, be ye warmed and filled: notwithſtanding ye give them not thoſe things which are needful to the body: what doth it profit? Even ſo faith, if it hath not works, is dead, being alone. And to this purpoſe he inſtanceth in Abraham, and Rahab, and ſhews, that the faith which juſtified them, did include in it the effects of faith, viz.

obedience and good works, ver. 21, 22. Was not Abraham our father justified by works when he had offered Isaac his son upon the altar? Seest thou how faith wrought with his works, and by works was faith made perfect? And ver. 23. And the scripture was fulfilled, which saith, Abraham believed God, and it was imputed unto him for righteousness. But if Abraham were justified by works, viz. by offering up his son upon the altar, in obedience to God's command, as he says before, at the 21st verse, how was the scripture fulfilled, which saith, that faith was imputed to him for righteousness, that is, he was justified by faith; unless faith take in the works of obedience? From whence he concludes, that by works a man is justified, and not by faith only; not by a naked assent to the truth, but by such a faith as includes obedience; which he farther illustrates by a similitude, at the last verse; As the body without the spirit is dead, so faith without works is dead also. A living faith doth as truly contain obedience in it, as a living body contains a spirit.

And those distinctions which are commonly applied to this discourse of St James, do not clear it, but contradict the express design of it. Some say that fides quæ est viva justificat; sed non qua viva: "Faith which is "living justifies; but not as a living faith." Others say, which is much to the same purpose, fides justificat sine operibus; sed fides sine operibus non justificat: "Faith justi-"fies without works; but faith without works does not "justify." But St James says expressly, that we are justified by works. How then is that true, that faith justifies without works? And he says that works are the life of our faith. How then can any man say, that though faith justifies, yet not as it is a living faith; when we are justified by that which is the very life of our faith, and that is obedience?

There are two other distinctions whereby men endeavour to elude this plain text, which I did not mention before; that faith justifies the person, and works justify the faith, and that this is St James's meaning. But what ground for this, when the text speaks expressly of the person being justified by works, as well as faith?

Was not Abraham our father justified by works? ver. 21. You see then that by works a man is justified, and not by faith only. Ver. 24. Likewise also was not Rahab the harlot justified by works? What colour is here for any man to say, that St James does not speak of the justification of the person by works, but of the faith? Or what necessity of framing this distinction, but only to serve an opinion? But, at this rate, a man may maintain any thing, though it be never so contrary to scripture, and elude the clearest text in the Bible.

The other distinction, which is much to the same sense, is, that the Apostle doth not here speak of a real justification before God, but a declarative justification before men. But, according to this, what sense can be made of verse 14. What doth it profit, my brethren, if a man say, I have faith, and have not works? Can faith save him? That is, according to this explication, can faith without works save him before men?

And this doth not contradict St Paul, who saith, Gal. ii. 16. that a man is not justified by the works of the law, but by the faith of Jesus Christ. For how does this, that we are justified, not by the legal dispensation, but by the faith of the gospel, which includes obedience and good works, contradict what St James says, that we are not justified by a bare assent to the truth of the gospel, but by obedience to the commands of it? And I do not see that, upon the contrary supposition, viz. that the faith of the gospel doth not include obedience in it, it is possible to reconcile these two apostles. Suppose this was St Paul's meaning, that we are justified by faith, as the only condition and instrument, call it what they will, of our justification; but not by obedience or good works, as a condition of our justification; by what kind of comment can St James's words be brought to this sense? What man would allow that those words at the 21st verse, Was not Abraham our father justified by works, when he offered Isaac his son upon the altar, should be explained by this sense? Was not Abraham, when, in obedience to God's command, he had offered his son upon the altar, and upon this act of obedience was justified, was not he justified by faith only, and not by any work or act of obedience ? Or that thoſe words at the 24th verſe, Ye ſee then that by works a man is juſtified, and not by faith only, ſhould be interpreted, Ye ſee then that by faith only a man is juſtified, and not by works ? and unleſs they be thus interpreted, they are not to be reconciled with the ſenſe of St Paul's words, which many faſten upon them : but if St Paul's words be taken in the moſt plain and obvious ſenſe they are capable of, viz. that we are not juſtified by the works of the law, that is, by performing the works required by the legal diſpenſation ; but by the faith of Jeſus Chriſt, that is, by aſſenting and ſubmitting to the revelation of the goſpel ; we do not ſtrain St James's words, to reconcile him with St Paul.

And thus I have ſhewn, that where the ſcripture ſpeaks of juſtification by faith, it ſpeaks of this faith which I have deſcribed. I add, and of no other ; not of a bare appropriation of the grace and mercy of the goſpel ; that is, in plain Engliſh, this is not juſtifying faith, to believe that I am pardoned and juſtified, nor to have a firm aſſurance of this. For, if we be juſtified by faith, we muſt believe before we can be juſtified ; but if this be juſtifying faith, to believe, or be aſſured we are juſtified, we muſt be juſtified before we believe ; or elſe when we believe that we are juſtified, we muſt believe that which is not true. Nor is this juſtifying faith, to lay hold of the righteouſneſs and merits of Chriſt for the pardon of our ſins ; that is, to truſt and conſide only in that, as the meritorious cauſe of our pardon. For though this be part of the notion of juſtifying faith, it is not all ; though this be one of the terms or conditions upon which we are juſtified ; yet it is not the whole and entire condition ; which, beſides this, takes in an aſſent to the whole goſpel, repentance from dead works, and obedience to all the precepts of the goſpel. And if any man can produce any one text which ſaith, that the faith which juſtifies, conſiſts only in a truſt and confidence in the merits of Chriſt, for the pardon of ſin, or any thing to this effect, I will be moſt ready publickly to acknowledge my error : but if no body can do this, I ſhall beg their pardon if I do continue ſtill of the ſame mind I was.

I have now done with the fourth thing I propounded: but before I ſpeak to the two heads which remain, I muſt remove an objection or two, that my former diſcourſe may ſeem liable to.

Object. 1. To make obedience a condition of pardon, ſeems to take away the freeneſs of God's grace in pardoning ſinners.

1. God's grace, in pardoning a ſinner, is ſaid to be free, not becauſe it is not ſuſpended upon any condition; for the ſcripture tells us plainly, that it is upon the condition of faith, and repentance, and forgiving others, and the like; but it is free, becauſe God was pleaſed freely to give his Son to die for our ſins, and to accept of his ſacrifice for the expiation of them, and to impoſe eaſy and reaſonable conditions upon us, in order to our enjoying of this benefit; and upon ſuch conditions, though they have nothing of virtue or merit, of any natural or moral efficacy, to deſerve, or procure ſuch a benefit as the pardon of our ſins, for the ſake of his Son, whom he gave to be a ranſom for us, to receive us to grace and mercy; and I think this abundantly enough to make our juſtification very gracious and free, though not abſolutely free from all condition.

2. Our ſalvation, in ſcripture, is ſaid to be as free as our juſtification; we are ſaid to be ſaved by grace, as well as juſtified freely by his grace. But will any man ſay, that we are ſaved without any conditions, who reads theſe texts? He that believeth on the Son, hath everlaſting life; but he that believeth not the Son, ſhall not ſee life. Bleſſed are the pure in heart, for they ſhall ſee God. Except ye repent ye ſhall all likewiſe periſh. If ye walk after the fleſh, ye ſhall die; but if, through the Spirit, ye mortify the deeds of the fleſh, ye ſhall live. Without holineſs no man ſhall ſee the Lord. So that he who can underſtand how we may be ſaved by grace, though our ſalvation be ſuſpended upon the condition of faith, repentance, and holineſs, and obedience of life, may, if he pleaſe, underſtand how we may be juſtified freely by God's grace, though it be upon the ſame conditions. So that if men were not monſtrouſly perverſe, it is impoſſible they ſhould not ſee the weakneſs of this objection.

Objection

Objection the ſecond. This is the doctrine of the Papiſts, that obedience and good works are a condition of our juſtification.

Anſ. 1. I am for the doctrine which is evidently contained in ſcripture, whoever hold it. A man ought not to be frighted out of the truth by any name.

2. But there is a wide difference between the doctrine of the Papiſts about juſtification, and this doctrine. They ſay, that obedience and good works are not only a condition of our juſtification, but a meritorious cauſe of it; which I abhor as much as any one. It is the doctrine of merit that the Proteſtants chiefly oppoſe in the matter of juſtification; and if ſome alſo oppoſe the Papiſts about good works being a condition, I know nobody that thinks himſelf obliged to hold every opinion that any Proteſtant hath maintained againſt the Papiſts: and the like I ſay to the objection of Socinianiſm and Arminianiſm, and a hundred names more, if people think fit to faſten them upon it.

And now I might compare this doctrine with the contrary. All that may be ſaid againſt it is, that it diminiſheth the grace of God: but that I have ſhewn it doth not; but then it hath theſe advantages. It is, ſo far as I can judge, (and mine own judgment muſt govern me), much more plainly contained in ſcripture, and it is a doctrine more according to godlineſs; it tends more to quicken men to obedience and a holy life, to believe that they cannot have their ſins otherwiſe pardoned, than to believe that they may have their ſins pardoned without obedience and a holy life; and if obedience be not a neceſſary condition of pardon, it is plain that men may be pardoned without it. For example, if a man promiſe me a thouſand pounds, only upon this condition, that I will believe him, and truſt him, but without any condition of doing what he ſhall command me, and he ſhall declare thus much to me; if I can truſt this man's word, I need not doubt but I ſhall have the ſum promiſed; though I ſhould diſobey him in every thing that he commanded me to do: This is juſt the caſe; and if it be, it is no wonder that men are ſo loath to diſbelieve this pleaſant opinion, which gives men comfortable hopes of the pardon of their ſins, upon ſuch eaſy terms. Not that I am ſo uncharitable as not to acknowledge that our worthy and excellent divines, who have been of this judgment, have always preſſed the neceſſity of holineſs and obedience: but I am ſorry they could not do it with ſo good advantage, according to their principles, the natural conſequences of them tending to licentiouſneſs, and a neglect of the precepts of the goſpel; to which purpoſe they have been ſadly abuſed by ſeveral libertines in theſe and former times, ever ſince Luther's days, and I could never yet ſee how Antinomianiſm could ſolidly be confuted upon thoſe principles.

3. That no metaphorical deſcriptions of juſtifying faith are allowable, any farther than as they ſerve to illuſtrate the plain, and proper, and ſimple notion of faith. My meaning is, he that would teach men what faith is, he muſt firſt acquaint men with the thing, and deſcribe it in as proper and ſimple words as can be, and not by figurative and metaphorical phraſes. Indeed, after a man hath delivered the ſimple notion of a thing in proper words, he may afterwards illuſtrate it by metaphors: but then theſe are not to be inſiſted upon, and ſtrained to the utmoſt extent of the metaphor, beyond what the true notion of the thing will bear: for if conſequences once come to be drawn from metaphors, and doctrines founded, and theories built upon them, inſtead of illuſtrating the thing, they blind and obſcure it, and ſerve to no other purpoſe, but to ſeduce and miſlead the underſtandings of men, and to multiply controverſies without end; and, as I told you before, I do the rather take notice of this abuſe of metaphors, upon this ſubject, becauſe I do not know any other head of divinity which hath ſuffered ſo much by them, as the doctrine of juſtifying faith, whereby the plain truth hath been very much darkened, and occaſion miniſtered to many endleſs diſputes. But this will beſt appear by ſome particular inſtances. Juſtifying faith hath uſually been deſcribed by theſe metaphors, reſting, and relying, and leaning upon Chriſt, apprehending, and laying hold, and applying of Chriſt, receiving of Chriſt, and coming to him. Now, concerning theſe, I ſhall briefly ſpeak theſe three or four things.

(1.) That

(1.) That none of theſe metaphors, except the two laſt, receiving of Chriſt, and coming to him, are any where uſed in ſcripture, to deſcribe juſtifying faith by; and therefore there is no reaſon why they ſhould be ſo much uſed and inſiſted on. Let any man ſhew me where juſtifying faith is any where in ſcripture deſcribed by reſting, and relying, and leaning upon Chriſt, by apprehending, and laying hold, and applying of him.

(2.) If theſe metaphors were explained and turned into proper and plain words, they can ſignify nothing elſe, but that faith which I have been all this while deſcribing. For what can any man underſtand by reſting, and relying, and leaning upon Chriſt, but to truſt in him as the author of our eternal ſalvation? under which word all the benefits which Chriſt hath purchaſed for us are comprehended. Now, can any man be ſaid to truſt in Chriſt, as the author of his ſalvation, otherwiſe than by aſſenting to the truth of the goſpel, and complying with the terms and conditions of it? And what can any man underſtand by apprehending, and laying hold on, and applying Chriſt, other than this, to make uſe of him for all thoſe ends and purpoſes for which God hath appointed him? And what thoſe are the ſcripture tells us, that he is made unto us of God, wiſdom, and righteouſneſs, and ſanctification, and redemption.

(3.) As for thoſe ſcripture-metaphors of receiving Chriſt, and coming to him, the ſcripture uſeth them but ſparingly, and I dare ſay, for once that it uſeth theſe metaphors, it doth twenty times deſcribe faith by plain and proper words; and where it does make uſe of theſe metaphors, it doth ſufficiently explain them. So you find coming to Chriſt is explained by learning of him: Matth. xi. 28, 29. Come unto me, all ye that labour, and are heavy laden, and I will give you reſt. Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me, for I am meek and lowly in heart: and ye ſhall find reſt unto your ſouls. That is, come to me as ſcholars and diſciples to be taught by me; in order to which, it is requiſite that we ſhould believe him. Oportet diſcentem credere: "He that will learn, "muſt believe him that teacheth him," and truſt his ſkill. And ſo for receiving him, leſt the metaphor ſhould ſeduce men, St John had no sooner used it, but he tells what he means by it. John i. 12. But as many as received him, to them gave he power to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on his name; that is, believed him to be the person promised to be the Messias, and Saviour of the world; as appears by the opposition in the verse before, He came to his own, and his own received him not; that is, rejected him, did not own him to be the true Messias. But now, if we will strain such a metaphor as this beyond the intention of it, and because believing is called a receiving of Christ, and we receive things with the hand, and the hand is an instrument, will from hence infer, that faith is an instrument of our justification; what may not men make of the scripture at this rate?

(4.) I will add this concerning scripture-metaphors in general, that where the scripture useth metaphors which were very familiar in those languages in which the scripture was writ, and well understood by those who spoke that language, but are very obscure and uncouth to us, and not at all used in our language, as most of the scripture metaphors are, the proper work of a minister is not to insist in such cases upon scripture-metaphors, to darken his discourse by them, but to explain them, and make them intelligible, to translate them into English, and instead of them to use such phrases as people are more familiarly acquainted with, and are used in our own language. For a man may be a barbarian that speaks to people in unknown phrases and metaphors, as well as he that speaks in an unknown tongue; and the very same reason that obligeth us to put the scripture into a known language, doth oblige men to explain the doctrines contained in it by such phrases and metaphors as are known and used in that language.

(5.) That if this plain and simple notion of justifying faith were admitted, it would supersede all those controversies about justification, which have so much troubled the reformed churches. Those who have been curious to enquire into these matters, have reckoned up, at least, twenty several opinions among the Protestants concerning justifying faith. I do not desire to acquaint myself with those differences; he that would know what justification and juſtifying faith are, ſhall ſooner come to underſtand the nature of them by diligent reading of the ſcriptures, than by reading over all the controverſial writings of divines about them; and if men would but content themſelves with thoſe plain and ſimple deſcriptions which the ſcripture gives us of faith, there could not be any great difference about it; this would cut off moſt of thoſe diſputes which have been commenced upon metaphors, and figurative ſpeeches. And here I had thought to have deſcended to a particular conſideration of the controverſies about juſtifying faith, but I am weary of the work, and therefore ſhall only make ſome brief reflexions upon this whole diſcourſe, and then apply it to our own uſe. But this, God willing, the next opportunity.

SERMON CCXXVIII.

JOHN XX. 31.

But theſe are written, that ye might believe that Jeſus is the Chriſt, the Son of God, and that believing ye might have life through his name.

The fourth ſermon on this text.

I Have, in my former diſcourſes on theſe words, treated largely of the nature of Chriſtian faith, particularly as it ſanctifies, juſtifies, and ſaves men. All that I farther propoſe is, to make ſome reflexions upon this whole diſcourſe, particularly that which relates to juſtifying faith, and then apply all to our own uſe.

I have already taken notice of two objections, to which my diſcourſe may ſeem liable; and if yet there remain any prejudice npon any man's ſpirit againſt this doctrine, I would deſire ſuch calmly to conſider it, and the agreeable-

nefs of it, not to the opinions of men, but to the word of God, and the ſuitableneſs of it to the great deſign of Chriſtian religion, every where expreſſed in the goſpel, which is to bring men to holineſs and obedience. And what argument and conſideration can be more powerful to take men off from ſin, and to excite them to the practice of holineſs, than this, that repentance and obedience are an indiſpenſable condition of our juſtification and pardon? And this is the very point in difference, whether the goſpel do not make repentance and obedience conditions of our pardon and juſtification, as well as an aſſent to the truth of the goſpel, and a truſt in Chriſt as the meritorious cauſe of our ſalvation. That they are, I have endeavoured to prove from ſcripture; and for the farther clearing of it, I deſire that the nature of the goſpel-covenant may be well conſidered, which I take to be this. On God's part there are certain benefits promiſed, juſtification and pardon of ſin, and eternal life and ſalvation. On our part there are certain conditions required before we can be made partakers of thoſe benefits; theſe are, to aſſent to the truth of the goſpel, truſting in Chriſt as our only Saviour, repentance from dead works, and a ſincere purpoſe and reſolution of obedience, and a holy life; theſe make up the whole and entire condition of the goſpel, and are often expreſſed by this one word, faith, which ſignifies the whole duty of a Chriſtian; becauſe he that truly believes the goſpel, will do whatever the goſpel requires. And hence it is, that to be a Chriſtian, and to be a believer, are, in the phraſe of the New Teſtament, all one. Now, the matter in controverſy is plainly this; whether this whole condition be required of us in order to our pardon and juſtification, as well as in order to our ſalvation. That repentance, and obedience, and holineſs of life, are conditions of our ſalvation, I think is univerſally agreed. I am ſure it is clearly expreſſed in theſe two texts, Chriſt is the author of eternal ſalvation to them that obey him, Heb. v. 9. Without holineſs no man ſhall ſee the Lord, Heb. xii. 14. And that the conditions of our juſtification and ſalvation are the ſame, I think it every whit as clear, both from ſcripture, and from the general acknowledgment of divines by neceſ-

ſary conſequence. From ſcripture, St James ſays, that the ſame thing that juſtifies us, ſaves us: for when he diſputes, whether we are juſtified by faith only, or by faith and works, he hath this expreſſion, What doth it profit, my brethren, though a man ſay he hath faith, and have not works? can faith ſave him? From whence the inference is plain, that upon the very ſame condition that we are juſtified we are ſaved. And it is evident by neceſſary conſequence, from the general acknowledgment of divines; for I think this is univerſally agreed by divines, that whatever puts a man into a ſtate of juſtification and pardon, puts a man into a ſtate of ſalvation; and if this be true, it neceſſarily follows, that the conditions of our juſtification and ſalvation are the ſame: and if aſſent to the truth of the goſpel, and truſt in Chriſt as our only Saviour, be the only conditions of our juſtification, then they are the only conditions of our ſalvation; and repentance and obedience are not conditions of our ſalvation: but if they be conditions of our ſalvation, then they are of our juſtification. And I will be bold to ſay, that this hath as much of demonſtration in it, as any thing in divinity is capable of; and I wonder extremely how any man, that conſiders the nature of the goſpel-covenant, can imagine that we ſhould be made partakers of any bleſſing or benefit promiſed in the covenant, without performing the whole condition of the covenant.

And now, if any man aſk, Cui bono? To what end is all this? Suppoſe it be true, to what purpoſe is it to awaken differences, and ſtir up controverſies about theſe matters? In order to theſe two ends, which I take to be very conſiderable,

1. That we may be able to anſwer the Papiſts, who charge us with Soliſidianiſm; as if we were of this opinion, that if a man do but truſt in Chriſt, that is, be but confidently perſuaded that he will ſave him, and pardon him, that is ſufficient; and, conſequently, he that is thus perſuaded, need not take any further care of his ſalvation, but may live as he liſt: and I do not ſee how this can be avoided; eſpecially if this be true, which our divines univerſally aſſert, that whatever puts a man into a juſtified ſtate, puts him into a ſtate of ſalvation; I ſay, I do not ſee how this charge can be avoided, unleſs we own holineſs and obedience to be conditions of our juſtification, as well as truſt in Chriſt. I know no other middle way between Popery and Antinomianiſm. But,

2. Which is more conſiderable, without this we can give no ſatisfactory and reaſonable account of our religion to a Heathen. Suppoſe a Heathen ſhould ſay thus: Your religion gives a very good account of the corruption and ſinfulneſs of mankind, and hath provided a very probable remedy for the expiation of it, by the death of the Son of God: but this ſeems to me very unreaſonable, and to contradict the moſt natural notions that we have of God's juſtice and holineſs, that he ſhould pardon men, as you ſay he does, though they do not repent of their ſins, nor are reſolved to leave them, nay, though they be reſolved to go on in a wicked courſe. Did ever any wiſe prince pardon a traitor upon theſe terms? But whoever ſays that repentance, and a ſincere purpoſe and reſolution of obedience, are not the condition of our pardon, ſays, that God will pardon men without repentance, though they are not at all ſorry for what they have done, nor reſolved to change their courſe: for that is a condition without which a thing cannot be; and if repentance be not a condition of pardon, a man may be pardoned without it. And, if this be true, Chriſtianity is the moſt lewd and ſenſeleſs doctrine in the world. For what can be a greater encouragement to ſin than this, to tell men that they may be pardoned without repentance? that is, though they live in ſin, and continue ſo to do. Paganiſm never taught any ſuch thing. Nay, they may add farther, that this which you teach as the doctrine of your religion, ſeems expreſly contrary to your own books, which you ſay contain your religion. Does not the Bible ſay, that he that confeſſeth and forſaketh his ſin, ſhall find mercy? And doth not this plainly imply, that repentance is a condition of pardon? Let the wicked forſake his way, and the unrighteous man his thoughts; and let him return unto the Lord, and he will have mercy upon him; and to our God, for he will abundantly pardon. Doth it not ſay, that if you forgive not men their treſpaſſes, paſſes, neither will your heavenly Father forgive you? Can any words more plainly expreſs a condition than theſe do? How ſhould we be able to defend our religion againſt ſuch an aſſault, unleſs we diſclaim this charge, and tell them plainly, and without a diſtinction, that our religion teacheth, that repentance, and reſolution of holineſs, and obedience, are conditions of our pardon and juſtification? I would to God men would conſult the honour of Chriſtianity, and, when they hold any opinion, they would conſider not the intereſt of a party, but the univerſal concernment of the Chriſtian religion. If we had to deal with ſubtile Heathens, as the primitive fathers of the church had, we ſhould ſee a neceſſity of laying aſide ſuch unreaſonable opinions. I would fain have any man ſhew any one clear paſſage, out of any of the ancient fathers and writers concerning Chriſtian religion, which ſays, that truſt in Chriſt for ſalvation is the only condition of our juſtification, and that repentance and obedience are not; or that explains juſtification by faith alone, in this ſenſe. I know it is uſually ſaid, the ancient fathers and Chriſtians were ignorant of the doctrine of juſtification in a great meaſure, and knew very little of the myſtery of the goſpel. I know not what they mean by myſtery: but I am ſure they defined Chriſtian religion better, and gave a more reaſonable and ſatisfactory account of it, than any of thoſe do, who are ſo apt to ſlight them.

The uſe of this doctrine is as follows:

Firſt, To perſuade men to place all their hope and confidence of ſalvation in Jeſus Chriſt, the Son of God; that is, to believe, that, through the alone merit of his death and ſufferings, God is reconciled to us, and that only upon the account of the ſatisfaction which he hath made to divine juſtice, we are reſtored to the favour of God, and our ſins are pardoned to us, and we have a title to eternal life. Not but that there are conditions required on our part, to make us capable of theſe benefits, faith and repentance, and ſincere obedience and holineſs of life, without which we ſhall never be made partakers of them: but that the ſatisfaction of Chriſt is the only meritorious cauſe of theſe bleſſings. And to perſuade men to the belief of this, I shall endeavour to satisfy them of these two things:

I. That Christ hath properly merited these blessings for us.

II. That he only hath done it. The first of these propositions is directly levelled against the Socinians: the second against the Papists. I shall speak but briefly of them.

I. That Christ hath properly merited these blessings for us: and this being purely matter of revelation, we are to rely upon scripture only for the proof of it. Matth. xx. 28. The Son of man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister, and to give his life a ransom for many, λύτρον ἀντὶ πολλῶν, a price of redemption, instead of that which should have been paid by us. John vi. 51. And the bread which I will give, is my flesh, which I will give for the life of the world. John x. 11. Christ is called the good shepherd, that lays down his life for his sheep. John xv. 12, 13. This is my commandment, that ye love one another, as I have loved you. Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends. Matth. xxvi, 28. For this is my blood of the new testament, which is shed for many, for the remission of sins. Rom. v. 6. For when we were yet without strength, in due time Christ died for the ungodly. 1 Cor. xv. 3. For I delivered unto you first of all, that which I also received, how that Christ died for our sins, according to the scriptures. 2 Cor. v, 14, 15. For the love of Christ constraineth us, because we thus judge, that if one died for all, then were all dead: and that he died for all, that they which live, should not henceforth live unto themselves, but unto him which died for them, and rose again. Eph. i. 7. In whom we have redemption through his blood, the forgiveness of sins, according to the riches of his grace. Col. i. 20, 21, 22. And (having made peace through the blood of his cross) by him to reconcile all things unto himself, by him, I say, whether they be things in earth, or things in heaven. And you that were sometime alienated, and enemies in your mind by wicked works, yet now hath he reconciled, in the body of his flesh through death, to present you holy, and unblameable, and unreproveable in his sight. 1 Thess. v. 9, 10. For God hath not appointed us to wrath; but to obtain salvation

salvation by our Lord Jesus Christ, who died for us. Heb. ii. 9. That he, by the grace of God, should taste death for every man. Heb. ix. 11, 12, 13, 14, 15. But Christ being come an high-priest of good things to come, by a greater and more perfect tabernacle, not made with hands, that is to say, not of this building; neither by the blood of goats and calves, but by his own blood he entered in once into the holy place, having obtained eternal redemption for us. For if the blood of bulls and of goats, and the ashes of an heifer sprinkling the unclean, sanctifieth to the purifying of the flesh; how much more shall the blood of Christ, who through the eternal Spirit offered himself without spot unto God, purge your conscience from dead works, to serve the living God? And for this cause he is the Mediator of the New Testament, that by means of death, for the redemption of the transgressions that were under the first testament, they which are called, might receive the promise of eternal inheritance. And, verses 25, 26, 27, 28. Nor yet that he should offer himself often, as the high-priest entered into the holy place every year with blood of others; (for then must he often have suffered since the foundation of the world): but now once in the end of the world, hath he appeared to put away sin by the sacrifice of himself. And as it is appointed unto men once to die, but after this the judgment: so Christ was once offered to bear the sins of many; and unto them that look for him shall he appear the second time, without sin, unto salvation. Heb. x. 11, 12. And every priest standeth daily ministering, and offering often-times the same sacrifices, which can never take away sins: but this man, after he had offered one sacrifice for sins, for ever sat down at the right hand of God. 1 Peter i. 18, 19. Forasmuch as ye know that ye were not redeemed with corruptible things, as silver and gold, from your vain conversation received by tradition from your fathers; but with the precious blood of Christ, as of a lamb without blemish and without spot. 1 Peter ii. 21, 24. Because Christ also suffered for us; who his own self bare our sins in his own body on the tree. 1 Peter iii. 18. For Christ also hath once suffered for sins, the just for the unjust, that he might bring us to God, 1 John ii. 1, 2. My little children, these things write I unto you, that ye sin not. And if any man sin, we have an advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous: and he is the propitiation for our sins; and not for ours only, but also for the sins of the whole world. 1 John iii. 16. Hereby perceive we the love of God, because he laid down his life for us: and we ought to lay down our lives for the brethren. 1 John iv. 10. Herein is love, not that we loved God; but that he loved us, and sent his Son to be the propitiation for our sins. Rev. i. 5. Unto him that loved us, and washed us from our sins in his own blood. Rev. v. 9. Thou wast slain, and hast redeemed us to God by thy blood, out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation. From these, and many other texts, it seems to be very plain and evident, that Christ died for our sins, and suffered in our stead, and, by the sacrifice of himself, hath made an atonement for us, and reconciled us to God, and hath paid a price and ransom for us, and, by the merit of his death, hath purchased for us forgiveness of sins, and inheritance among them that are sanctified. And I do not know any doctrine of our religion, that is founded and established upon more and plainer texts, which cannot be understood in any other sense, without offering great violence to the first and most obvious meaning of them.

I know the Socinians have framed evasions to all these texts, which I have not time now to produce and examine; nor would it be worth the while. I shall only say this to them in general; that there is no principle of religion so plainly laid down in the whole scripture, but may be overthrown by the same, or the like evasions. Suppose Christ had died in our stead, and made satisfaction for sin, and God had intended to declare so much to us; in what plainer, and more express and proper words could he have done it, than the scripture hath already done? If God had said in the scripture expressly, that Christ had died in our room and stead, and had satisfied for our sins: these very expressions, by the same arts of interpretation, might have been strained and wrested to some other sense. So that, if God did not intend to express to us by these texts, that Christ satisfied for the sins of men; yet they are so obvious to be interpreted to that sense, and so hardly, if at all, capable of any other, that we cannot imagine, without a great reflection upon the wiſdom of God, that he ſhould deliver his mind to men in words and expreſſions ſo exceedingly liable to a quite different ſenſe from what he intended. Beſides that, there is nothing more unreaſonable than to deny that to be the meaning of ſcripture, which, if it had been the meaning, could not have been expreſſed in plainer and more advantageous words; eſpecially when this is done, not in one or two texts, but very many; and not by one form of expreſſion, but ſeveral, and all inclining to the ſame ſenſe; and, which is worſt of all, this violence is offered to ſcripture in a matter which does neither contradict other texts of ſcripture, nor the reaſon of mankind, viz. that one man ſhould ſuffer in another's ſtead, and make ſatisfaction for the crimes and faults which another hath committed; ſuppoſing the party offended be willing to accept of the commutation, and the party that ſuffers in another's ſtead do voluntarily do it.

II. That Chriſt only hath merited theſe bleſſings for us, and that he had no partner with him in this; or there is no other hath merited theſe bleſſings for us, nor can we ourſelves merit them.

1. No other hath merited theſe bleſſings for us. Not to take notice of what the Papiſts ſay of the meritorioufneſs of our works of ſupererogation, which go into the treaſury of the church, and make up a publick ſtock of merit, to be diſpoſed and dealt out by the Pope at his diſcretion; they have, by a moſt unparalleled blaſphemy, joined the Virgin Mary with Chriſt in the work of our redemption; and ſome of them have been ſo impiouſly bold, as to parallel the virtue of her milk with the efficacy of Chriſt's blood. And though Chriſt ſay, that he trode the wine-preſs of his Father's wrath alone, and of the people there was none with him; yet Bonaventure, in his meditations, ventures to corrupt the text, by this fooliſh gloſs, Nullus erat tecum. Recte, Domine, ſed erat tecum fœmina; "Right, Lord, there was no man with thee, but "there was a woman, viz. thy mother."

2. Nor can we ourſelves do any thing whereby we can merit theſe bleſſings at God's hands. Conſidering that we received our being, and all that we are and have, from

God, and, upon account of theſe benefits, are obliged to love him and ſerve him to the utmoſt; what a ſenſeleſs piece of arrogance is it to ſay, that a creature can merit any thing at God's hand? Whatever we give God is of his own, and when we have done all we can, we have done no more than our duty. And can any man challenge any reward for doing what he ought to do? Can any man make ſatisfaction for a fault that he hath committed, by doing his duty, that is, by not committing another? It is a ſure rule, Debitum debito non ſolvitur. We are indebted to God by the breach of his law: but we cannot quit this debt, and ſatisfy for this breach, by not breaking it again, becauſe we owe to God all poſſible obedience.

Beſides that, all our obedience is imperfect, and is ſo far from meriting, that it ſtands in need of pardon; and can a man demerit and merit by the ſame action? Can he who deſerves to be puniſhed for an action, becauſe he did it no better, deſerve to be rewarded for the ſame action, becauſe he did it ſo well? And to ſay that Chriſt hath merited that our imperfect obedience ſhould merit, either ſignifies only this, that Chriſt hath merited that our imperfect obedience ſhould be accepted by God, notwithſtanding its imperfection; (and this is true, but nothing to the purpoſe of merit); or elſe it ſignifies, that Chriſt hath merited that that which is no wiſe meritorious, ſhould be ſo; that is, that the nature of things ſhould be altered; which is not only falſe, but ſenſeleſs.

Secondly, To perſuade us to live as we believe. If we profeſs to believe the goſpel to be true, then let our hearts and lives be ſuitable to thoſe truths which we believe. If we believe Jeſus to be the Chriſt, the Son of God, we believe the doctrine which he delivered to the world to be from God, and, conſequently, to be true; we believe the precepts of it are holy, and juſt, and good, and that they are neceſſary to be obſerved by us, as being in order to our peace and happineſs; we believe that the promiſes of the goſpel are all yea and amen, and ſhall every tittle of them be made good; we believe that the threatenings of the goſpel ſhall all punctually be fulfilled. Now, how ought men to live, that believe all this? Having a law given us, which hath the ſanction of ſuch promiſes miſes and threatenings, ought we not to conform our lives to it, and charge ourſelves with obedience to all thoſe precepts of piety towards God, and purity and temperance in the government of ourſelves, and juſtice and righteouſneſs in our dealings with others, which are contained in this new law of the goſpel? If the goſpel hath promiſed eternal life and happineſs to thoſe who do conſcientiouſly abſtain from ſin, and follow holineſs; having theſe promiſes, ought we not to cleanſe ourſelves from all filthineſs both of fleſh and ſpirit, perfecting holineſs in the fear of God? If the goſpel hath threatened, that, at the end of the world, Chriſt will come in flaming fire, &c. if we believe theſe things ſhall be, what manner of perſons ought we to be in all holy converſation and godlineſs?

I have formerly ſhewed at large, how unbecoming it is for any man that profeſſeth himſelf a Chriſtian, to live unſuitably to his profeſſion; that it is the greateſt diſparagement to the goſpel, and the higheſt reflection upon it that can be; and that it is infinitely dangerous to us; and though theſe be very proper conſiderations, yet, becauſe I have formerly urged them, I ſhall not now enforce my exhortation with theſe arguments; but ſhall mention two other conſiderations, and ſo conclude.

Firſt, If our lives be not anſwerable to our belief, our faith will be ineffectual to all intents and purpoſes.

Secondly, A life unſuitable to our belief is the highway to infidelity and atheiſm.

Firſt, If our lives be not anſwerable to our belief, our faith will be ineffectual to all real intents and purpoſes.

1. It will be ineffectual to give us the reputation of Chriſtians, among wiſe and diſcerning perſons. We profeſs to believe the goſpel; but if we live contrary to it, our profeſſion is proteſtatio contra factum, and, therefore, not credible; becauſe our actions contradict it. The conſtant tenor of a man's actions is a more credible and emphatical declaration of the inward ſenſe of his heart, and ſhews better what the man believes, than the moſt ſolemn profeſſion in words. When our words are not confirmed by our actions, they are but an empty ſound, and ſignify nothing. I may allude to that of St Paul, 1 Cor. xiii. 2. Though a man have all faith, yet, if he be destitute of the true effect of faith, charity, he is but as a sounding brass, and a tinkling cymbal. St James doth very well set forth the inefficacy of such a faith, by this similitude, James ii. 15, 16, 17. If a brother or sister be naked, and destitute of daily food, and one of you say unto them, Depart in peace, be you warmed and filled; notwithstanding ye give them not those things which are needful to the body; what doth it profit? Even so faith, if it hath not works, is dead. Men are not so easily cozened as we think they are. Discerning men will not be imposed upon, and put off with a formal and empty profession of faith, when there is nothing in our lives to answer it. It is not standing up in the church, and professing that we believe in God, and in Jesus Christ, that he was born, and died, and rose again, and, at the end of the world, will come to judge the quick and the dead, that will persuade men that we are Christians. Men will look into our lives, and examine our actions, and enquire into our conversations: by these they will judge of the truth and reality of our profession. Let us not delude ourselves, and think to pass for Christians upon these terms, among any that know how to make a right judgment of things. We may cozen ourselves; but we cannot cheat others, who are not so partial to us, as we are apt to be to ourselves. It is not our winking, that hinders others from seeing us.

Nay, I go farther, it is not an earnest contending for fundamental articles of our Christian faith, if we live contrary to them, that will satisfy any wise man that we believe them; much less an intemperate zeal for indifferent opinions in religion. Such were the doctrines concerning the necessity on the one hand, and the unlawfulness of circumcision on the other: but the assent to the one opinion, or the other, in these matters, neither circumcision availeth any thing, nor uncircumcision, but faith that worketh by love, the new creature, the keeping of the commandments of God, as the Apostle in several places expresseth it. Men stand much upon the title of orthodox, by which is usually understood, not believing the doctrine of Christ or his Apostles, but such opinions as are in vogue among such a party, such systems of divinity as have been compiled piled in haſte by thoſe whom we have in admiration; and, whatever is not conſonant to theſe little bodies of divinity, though poſſibly it agree well enough with the word of God, is error and hereſy; and whoever maintains it, can hardly paſs for a Chriſtian among ſome angry and perverſe people. I do not intend to plead for any error; but I would not have Chriſtianity chiefly meaſured by matters of opinion. I know no ſuch error and hereſy as a wicked life. That man believes the goſpel beſt who lives moſt according to it. Though no man can have a worſe opinion of the Socinian doctrine than I have, yet I had rather a man ſhould deny the ſatisfaction of Chriſt, than believe it, and abuſe it, to the encouragement of ſin. Of the two, I have more hopes of him that denies the divinity of Chriſt, and lives otherwiſe ſoberly, and righteouſly, and godly in the world, than of the man who owns Chriſt to be the Son of God, and lives like a child of the devil.

2. Such a faith as hath not an anſwerable life, will be ineffectual to the purpoſe of juſtification and ſalvation. So St James tells us, it is a dead faith, and profits nothing, that no man is juſtified by it, nor will it ſave any man. Chriſt is the author of eternal ſalvation to them who ſo believe his doctrine as to obey it; he will come in flaming fire, to render vengeance, not only to them that do not believe, but to them that do not obey the goſpel. It will not be ſufficient, at the day of judgment, to plead our profeſſion of faith in Chriſt, and to ſay, Lord, Lord, have we not propheſied in thy name, and in thy name have caſt out devils, and in thy name have done many wondrous works? Doing all this in Chriſt's name, implies that they profeſs to believe in him; but, notwithſtanding all this, if they be workers of iniquity, Chriſt will ſay to ſuch, Depart from me, I know you not. If our Saviour makes a true and proper repreſentation of the day of judgment, and the proceedings of it, Matth. xxv. mens faith ſhall then be tried by the real fruits and effects of it; then the enquiry ſhall be, how men have lived? what good they have done, or omitted and neglected? and accordingly ſentence will be paſſed upon them. Nay, ſuch a faith is ſo far from ſaving, that it will be an aggravation of our condemnation, and ſink us the deeper into hell.

There

There is one that condemneth you, even Jesus in whom you trust.

Secondly, A life unsuitable to our belief is the highway to infidelity and atheism, to bring others and ourselves to it.

1. To bring others to infidelity and atheism, and to confirm them in it. What can be a more effectual bar to keep Heathens, and Jews, and Turks from entertaining the gospel? what can be a greater confirmation of them in their infidelity, than so to misrepresent Christian religion to them, as we do by our unsuitable lives? What can be a stronger prejudice against it, to men who do not look narrowly into it, but only see it at a distance, than to see what fruit it produces in the lives of Christians? May they not invert that proverbial speech of our Saviour's, Does a vine send forth thorns? If Christianity were such a holy institution, how comes it to pass that Christians are so wicked? If Jesus Christ were so excellent a master, we should see it in his scholars; si Christus sancta docuisset, Christiani sancte vixissent, as Salvian speaks. And it is the way to bring men to atheism. What more like to take men off from all religion, than to see the religion which pretends to be the best in the world, represented by the lives of Christians at such a disadvantage, as if it were a barren, and fruitless, and ineffectual thing, as if they who profess it, did believe it to be a lie, and gave no credit at all to the doctrines of it?

2. It is the way to bring ourselves to infidelity and atheism. As an erroneous judgment and understanding hath usually an evil influence upon mens lives, so much more a vicious and corrupt life hath a bad influence upon mens understandings. It is so uneasy a thing for men to act contrary to their reason, and against the dictates of their understandings, that men, for their own quiet, and in their own defence, will bend their judgments, and make them comply with the interest of their lusts. Mens affections, which way soever they incline, set a bias upon their understandings; and this doth not only proceed from the nature of the thing, but from the just judgment of God. 2 Thess. ii. 10, 11, 12. the Apostle tells us, that those who receive not the truth in the love of it, that they may be ſaved; God will ſend them ſtrong deluſions, to believe lies; that they all may be damned, who believe not the truth, but have pleaſure in unrighteouſneſs. If men once have pleaſure in unrighteouſneſs, it will not be long before they give over believing the truth, becauſe God, by his juſt judgment, will give them over to themſelves, to follow the bias of their own corrupt hearts, which inclines them to believe lies. Of all perſons in the world, a wicked and unholy Chriſtian is moſt likely to turn a ſpeculative infidel and atheiſt; and none ſo like to fall into this groſs darkneſs, as thoſe who reſiſt and quench ſo great a light as that of the goſpel is, which they profeſs to believe

Of the miracles wrought in confirmation of Chriſtianity.

HEB. ii. 4.

God alſo bearing them witneſs, both with ſigns and wonders, and with divers miracles, and gifts of the Holy Ghoſt, according to his own will.

The firſt ſermon on this text.

WHoever impartially conſiders the Chriſtian religion, cannot but acknowledge the laws and precepts of it to be ſo reaſonable; and the practice of them ſo evidently to tend, not only to the happineſs of particular perſons, but to the peace and welfare of the world; and the promiſes and threatenings of the goſpel, which are the great motives to perſuade men to the obedience of thoſe laws, to be ſo agreeable to the natural hopes and fears which mankind were always poſ-

ſeſſed withal; that, upon this conſideration, it might juſtly be expected, that the doctrine of Chriſtianity, upon the firſt publication of it, ſhould have been entertained with a readineſs of mind proportionable to the reaſonableneſs of it.

Or, if the bare reaſonableneſs of it be not thought inducement enough, we may eaſily imagine, how God, if he had pleaſed, could, upon the firſt appearance of this religion in the world, have given it ſuch advantages, as would mightily have contributed to the more eaſy reception and entertainment of it. He could have ordered things ſo, that our bleſſed Saviour, the author of this doctrine, ſhould have been, as the Jews expected, a great temporal monarch; he could have raiſed him to that dignity, and have armed him with that authority, as muſt have given him a mighty power and influence over mankind, and would have gained the great, and the wiſe, and the learned, to have been active inſtruments in the propagating of this religion, and in perſuading men to the embracing of it.

But he, whoſe ways are above our ways, and whoſe thoughts are above our thoughts, as the heavens are above the earth, did not think fit to have it promoted and carried on this way; nay, he ſeems on purpoſe to have ſtripped it of all ſecular advantages, that it might be perfectly free from all ſuſpicion of a worldly intereſt and deſign, and that it might be evident to all the world, that it was a plant which his own right hand had planted; and that it did not owe its eſtabliſhment to the authority, and wiſdom, and contrivance of men, but to the power of God, and to the immediate favour and contrivance of heaven.

And now, being thus deſtitute of all worldly aſſiſtance, though never ſo reaſonable in itſelf, it was not likely that it ſhould be able, with ſucceſs, to grapple with the luſts and corruptions of men, to which it was ſo directly oppoſite: nor with the ſtrong prejudices of their education in a contrary religion, which are always hard to be overcome; nor with the temporal intereſts of men, which were all, at that time, to be renounced and quitted for its ſake; unleſs it had ſome other advantages to make way for it, and to recommend it to the minds of men.

men. For having no ſecular baits and allurements to tempt men to the profeſſion of it; no earthly contrivance and aſſiſtance to ſupport it and bear it out, but, on the contrary, the moſt violent and powerful oppoſition raiſed againſt it; it was neceſſary that thoſe who offered it to the world, ſhould be able to give credit to it ſome other way, and to produce very ſenſible and convincing arguments of another kind: otherwiſe they might have deſpaired of ever conquering the prejudices of men againſt it, and of perſuading them to embrace that religion, which was ſo apparently contrary both to their inclinations and intereſts.

So that, in theſe circumſtances, in order to the full conviction of men, that thoſe who publiſhed this doctrine to them came from God, and were commiſſioned and ſent by him to teach the world, it was very fitting, that God himſelf ſhould give ſome remarkable teſtimony to the firſt preachers of it; and this the text tells us he did, by bearing witneſs to them, with ſigns, aud wonders, and with divers miracles, and gifts of the Holy Ghoſt.

For the better underſtanding of theſe words, we ſhall do well to reflect upon the deſign of this epiſtle, which was to eſtabliſh the Jews, who had but newly embraced Chriſtianity, in the ſtedfaſt belief and profeſſion of it, notwithſtanding the troubles and perſecutions which attended it; and to this end the Apoſtle repreſents to them, that the goſpel was delivered with more authority, and had a greater confirmation given to it than the law. The law was delivered by angels; but the goſpel by the Son of God: and if the contempt of the law was ſo ſeverely puniſhed, what might they expect would be the fate of thoſe who ſhould ſlight and reject the goſpel? If the word ſpoken by angels was ſtedfaſt, and every tranſgreſſion and diſobedience received a juſt recompence of reward: how ſhall we eſcape, if we neglect ſo great ſalvation, which at firſt began to be ſpoken by the Lord, and was confirmed unto us by them that heard him? God alſo bearing them witneſs with ſigns and wonders, and with divers miracles and gifts of the Holy Ghoſt, according to his own will; Συνεπιμαρτυροῦντος τοῦ Θεοῦ, God adjoining this farther teſtimony of ſigns and wonders. The apoſtles teſtified what they had heard from our Lord; and to give credit and confirmation to their teſtimony, God was pleaſed to endow them with miraculous gifts; he bare them witneſs with ſigns, and wonders, and miracles. So likewiſe, Acts xiv. 3. it is ſaid, that God gave teſtimony to the word of his grace, granting ſigns and wonders to be done by the apoſtles. Sometimes there are more words put together, to expreſs the giving of this miraculous power. Acts ii. 22. Jeſus of Nazareth, approved of God by miracles, and wonders, and ſigns. 2 Cor. xii. 12. St Paul, ſpeaking of himſelf, ſays, The ſigns of an apoſtle were wrought among you, in all patience, in ſigns, and wonders, and miracles. Theſe were the marks of an extraordinary and immediate commiſſion, ſuch as was that of the apoſtles.

It is to no purpoſe nicely to enquire into the difference of theſe words, Σημεῖα, τέρατα, δυνάμεις, ſigns, wonders, and miracles, becauſe, in all probability there is no difference intended, it being the manner of the Hebrews, when they would expreſs a great thing, or a great degree of any thing, to heap ſeveral words together, ſignifying the ſame thing. So we find, Deut. vi. 5. Thou ſhalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy ſoul, and with all thy might; that is, greatly, with a very ardent and intenſe degree of affection. So likewiſe in the text, God is ſaid to bear witneſs to the apoſtles, with ſigns, and wonders, and miracles; that is, in a very eminent and extraordinary manner, by great and wonderful miracles.

Firſt, That miracles are a divine teſtimony given to a perſon or doctrine: God bearing them teſtimony, by ſigns, and wonders, and miracles.

Secondly, That God gave this teſtimony to the apoſtles, and firſt preachers of Chriſtianity, in a very eminent manner; for ſo the phraſe ſignifies, ſo many words being multiplied to expreſs the greatneſs of the thing.

Thirdly, We will conſider the reaſon why miracles are now ceaſed in the church, and have been for ſeveral ages, ſo that there have been no footſteps of them for a long time.

Firſt,

Firſt, That miracles are a divine teſtimony given to a perſon or doctrine. God is here ſaid to bear witneſs to the apoſtles, with ſigns, and wonders, and divers miracles; that is, the miracles which God enabled them to work, were an evidence that their doctrine was from God.

And becauſe there is ſome difficulty in this argument, therefore, that we may the more diſtinctly underſtand of what force this argument or teſtimony of miracles is, to prove the divinity of any perſon or doctrine, it will be requiſite clearly to ſtate theſe two things:

I. What a miracle is.

II. In what circumſtances, and with what limitations, miracles are a ſufficient teſtimony to the truth and divinity of any doctrine. The clearing of theſe two things ſhall be my work at this time.

I. What a miracle is. The ſhorteſt and plaineſt deſcription I can give of it, is this, that it is a ſupernatural effect, evident and wonderful to ſenſe. So that there are two things neceſſary to a miracle.

1. That it be a ſupernatural effect.

2. That it be evident and wonderful to ſenſe.

1. That it be a ſupernatural effect. By a ſupernatural effect, I mean ſuch an effect, as either in itſelf, and in its own nature, or in the manner and circumſtances of it, exceeds any natural power that we know of to produce it. For there are ſome things that are miraculous in themſelves; others that are only miraculous in the manner and circumſtances of their operation. For inſtance, the reſurrection of one from the dead, is a thing which in itſelf is ſupernatural, and an effect above any power that we know of in nature to produce; but the healing of ſeveral diſeaſes and the ſpeaking of languages, are not things which are in themſelves, and in their nature ſupernatural: for we ſee that they may be acquired by natural ſkill and induſtry: but to heal all ſorts of diſeaſes in an inſtant, and by a word, and without the application of natural means; and on a ſudden to ſpeak languages which a man never learned; theſe are things, which, though they be not in their nature, yet in ſuch circumſtances as theſe, they are ſupernatural.

I ſay, that a ſupernatural effect is that which is above any natural power that we know of to produce; by which I do not mean, that miracles are always an immediate effect of the divine power, and conſequently that God alone can work them. For angels, good or bad, may do ſuch things as exceed any natural power known to us, and ſuch as we cannot diſtinguiſh by any certain marks and characters from thoſe effects which are wrought by the immediate power of God: and if we cannot diſtinguiſh them, they are equally miracles to us. When the angel ſlew 185,000 in the camp of the Aſſyrians in one night, this ought in all reaſon to be reckoned a miracle; and yet this, though done by the command of God, an angel might do by his own power and ſtrength; for they excel in ſtrength: but what limitations to ſet to their power, we cannot tell, only it is finite; ſo that excepting thoſe things which the ſcripture hath peculiarly appropriated to God, we cannot ſay what it is that an angel cannot do.

The ſame may be ſaid concerning evil angels. The devil may work wonders, or aſſiſt his inſtruments to work them. So Pharaoh's magicians wrought ſeveral miracles by the power of the devil, and did ſome of the very ſame things that Moſes and Aaron did, either really or in appearance, and it is all one whether. For he who to mens ſenſes turns a rod into a ſerpent, works as great a miracle to me, as he who really does it; and if I am not to believe a thing to be a miracle, when to my ſenſes it appears to be wrought, I am never to believe any, unleſs I could make ſome difference between thoſe miracles which are real, and thoſe that only appear to be wrought; for if we know not how to diſtinguiſh them, they are to us all one as if they were real; but if they may be diſtinguiſhed, then there will be need of another miracle, to ſhew which are real, and which not; and the ſame queſtion and doubt will ariſe about that miracle, and ſo without end.

So that I do not ſee what is gained by ſaying, that Pharaoh's magicians did only delude mens ſenſes, but did not turn their rods really into ſerpents, as Aaron did his; becauſe this may be ſaid on one ſide, as well as on the other: for to the ſtanders-by there was no difference, but the one ſeemed to the ſenſes of the beholders to be as real as the other; and the text makes no difference, but ſays, The magicians did in like manner; for they caſt down every man his rod, and they became ſerpents, only Aaron's had this advantage, that his rod ſwallowed up their rods: but the main difference was here, Moſes and Aaron wrought ſuch miracles, as the magicians could not work, neither really, nor in appearance; for when Aaron, by ſmiting the duſt with his rod, had turned it into lice, it is ſaid that the magicians attempted to do ſo with their inchantments, but could not, and then they yielded, and acknowledged that it was the finger of God. And if they had not been thus plainly overcome, but could, to all appearance of ſenſe, have done all thoſe things which Moſes and Aaron did, it might juſtly have been diſputed which had been the true prophets.

So that the devil and his inſtruments may work miracles. Moſes plainly ſuppoſeth that a falſe prophet, who comes to ſeduce the people to idolatry, may work a true ſign or wonder. Deut. xiii. 1, 2. If there ariſe among you a prophet, or a dreamer of dreams, and giveth thee a ſign or a wonder; and the ſign or the wonder come to paſs, whereof he ſpake unto thee, ſaying, Let us go after other gods. And our bleſſed Saviour expreſly foretels, Matth. xxiv. 24. that falſe Chriſts and falſe prophets ſhall ariſe after his death, and ſhew great ſigns and wonders.

From all which it is evident, that it is not of the eſſence of a miracle, as many have thought, that it be an immediate effect of the divine power. It is ſufficient, that it exceed any natural power that we know of to produce it. And if ſuch effects be not to be eſteemed miracles, a miracle would ſignify nothing; becauſe no man could know when it is wrought, nor diſtinguiſh it from thoſe effects which appear to be miraculous, but are not. This is the firſt property or condition of a miracle, that it be ſupernatural, that is, ſuch an effect as exceeds any natural power that we know of to produce it. But then,

2. There is another condition alſo required to a miracle, that it be an effect evident and wonderful to ſenſe: for, if we do not ſee it, it is to us as if it were not, and can be no teſtimony or proof of any thing, becauſe itſelf ſtands in need of another miracle to give teſtimony to it, and to prove that it was wrought; and neither in ſcripture, nor in profane authors, nor in common uſe of ſpeech, is any thing called a miracle, but what falls under the notice of our ſenſes; a miracle being nothing elſe but a thing wonderful to ſenſe; and the very end and deſign of it is to be a ſenſible proof and conviction to us of ſomething which we do not ſee.

And for want of this condition, tranſubſtantiation, if it were true, would be no miracle: it would indeed be very ſupernatural, but for all that, it would not be a ſign or wonder; for a ſign or wonder is always a ſenſible thing, ſomething that is wonderful and aſtoniſhing to ſenſe, otherwiſe it is no ſign or wonder. That ſuch a change as is pretended in tranſubſtantiation ſhould really be wrought, and yet there ſhould be no ſign and appearance of it, is a thing very wonderful, but not to ſenſe; for our ſenſes perceive no change, the bread and wine to all our ſenſes remaining juſt as they were before. Now, that a thing ſhould remain to all appearance juſt as it was, hath nothing at all of wonder in it. We wonder indeed when we ſee a ſtrange thing done: but no man wonders when he ſees nothing done.

So that, to ſpeak the truth, tranſubſtantiation, if they will have it a miracle, is ſuch a miracle, as any man may work, that hath but confidence to face men down that he works it, and the fortune to be believed. And however they of the church of Rome are wont to magnify their prieſts, chiefly upon the account of this miracle, which they ſay they can work every day, and every hour, if they pleaſe; yet I cannot underſtand, how it magnifies them ſo much; for when this great work, as they call it, is done, there is nothing more appears to be done, than if there were no miracle. Now, ſuch a miracle, as to all appearance is no miracle, I ſee no reaſon why a Proteſtant miniſter may not work as often as he pleaſeth, as well as they: or if he can but have the patience to let it alone, it will work itſelf;

for certainly nothing in the world is eaſier than to let a thing be as it is, and by ſpeaking a few words over it to make it juſt what it was before. In ſhort, a miracle is a wonder to ſenſe, and where a man ſees nothing that is ſtrange done, there is no miracle: for if he will call it a miracle, when things remain juſt as they were, and no ſenſible change is made in them, every man may every day work a thouſand ſuch miracles. I come now, in the

II. Place, to conſider in what circumſtances and with what cautions and limitations, miracles do give teſtimony to the truth and divinity of any doctrine; for inſtance, of the Chriſtian doctrine: and for the clearing of this matter, I ſhall lay down theſe propoſitions:

1. That the entire proof of the Chriſtian doctrine or religion, conſiſts of many conſiderations, which, taken together, make up a full demonſtration of the truth of it, when perhaps no one of them, taken ſingly, and by itſelf, is a convincing and undeniable proof.

The Chriſtian religion hath all the characters of divinity upon it, which any religion can be expected to have: whether we conſider the doctrine of it, in which there is nothing unworthy of God; for it makes ſuch a repreſentation of God, and gives ſuch directions concerning his worſhip, as is moſt agreeable to thoſe apprehenſions which the wiſeſt men have always had of God, and of that ſervice which is moſt proper to be given to him. Indeed it declares ſomething concerning God, which is very myſterious, and paſt our comprehenſions; but this ought not to offend us, ſince natural light always did acknowledge the divine nature to be incomprehenſible.

The precepts likewiſe of this religion are highly reaſonable, and ſuch as plainly tend to the perfection and happineſs of human nature; and the arguments to enforce theſe precepts are not only very powerful in themſelves, but very ſuitable to the natural hopes and fears of men.

Or if we conſider the author of this doctrine, our bleſſed Saviour, he will appear to be a divine perſon, and a teacher ſent from God, by the clear predictions concerning him long before he came; which when he came were exactly exactly fulfilled in him; by the miracles he wrought to give teſtimony of him; by the eminent holineſs and virtue of his life; and by innumerable things which he foretold concerning himſelf, the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, and the diſperſion of the Jewiſh nation, and the ſucceſs of his doctrine in the world, which were all afterwards punctually accompliſhed. All theſe proved him to be an extraordinary perſon. But he was likewiſe declared to be the Son of God, by a voice from heaven, and by his reſurrection from the dead.

Or if we conſider the firſt publiſhers of this doctrine, to whom God bare witneſs, with ſigns, and wonders, and divers miracles, and gifts of the Holy Ghoſt, and the wonderful ſucceſs they met withal, notwithſtanding the outward meanneſs of their perſons, in ſo much that their doctrine very ſuddenly prevailed, and paſſed like lightning through the world; and in the ſpace of a few years ſpread itſelf beyond the utmoſt bounds of the vaſt Roman empire, and this in deſpite of the moſt powerful oppoſitions and fierceſt perſecutions that ever were raiſed againſt any religion; ſo that, like the children of Iſrael in Egypt, it did thrive under affliction, and the more it was oppreſſed, the more it grew and multiplied; becauſe there was a divine power that did viſibly accompany the firſt publiſhers of it, and men were not able to reſiſt the ſpirit whereby they ſpake.

All theſe together make up a full and convincing demonſtration of the truth and divinity of the Chriſtian doctrine: and yet perhaps no one of theſe alone is a ſufficient proof of it. For though a doctrine be never ſo reaſonable in itſelf, this is no certain argument that it is from God, if no teſtimony from heaven be given to it; becauſe it may be the reſult and iſſue of human reaſon and diſcourſe: and though a doctrine be atteſted by miracles, yet the matter of it may be ſo unreaſonable and abſurd, ſo unworthy of God, and ſo contrary to the natural notions which men have of him, that no miracles can be ſufficient to give confirmation to it; and therefore in ſome caſes the ſcripture forbids men to hearken to a prophet, though he work a miracle: Deut. xiii. 1, 2, 3. If there ariſe among you a prophet, or a dreamer of dreams, and giveth thee a ſign or a wonder, and

the ſign or the wonder come to paſs, whereof he ſpake unto thee, ſaying, Let us go after other gods, which thou haſt not known, and let us ſerve them: thou ſhalt not hearken unto the words of that prophet. And the reaſon is given, ver. 5. Becauſe he hath ſpoken to turn you away from the Lord your God. From whence it is plain, that a miracle is not ſufficient to eſtabliſh the worſhip of a falſe god.

The ſum of what I have ſaid is this, that we do not found our belief of Chriſtianity upon any one argument taken by itſelf; but upon the whole evidence which we are able to produce for it, in which there is nothing wanting that is proper and reaſonable to prove any religion to be from God.

2. But yet miracles are the principal external proof and confirmation of the divinity of a doctrine. I told you before, that ſome doctrines are ſo abſurd, that a miracle is not a ſufficient proof of them: but if a doctrine be ſuch as is nowiſe unworthy of God, nor contrary to thoſe notions which we have of him, miracles are the higheſt teſtimony that can be given to it, and have always been owned by mankind for an evidence of inſpiration. And therefore Nicodemus takes it for an acknowledged principle, that miracles are a ſign of a teacher ſent from God. John iii. 2. We know that thou art a teacher come from God: for none can do theſe miracles which thou doſt, except God be with him. And the ſcripture conſtantly reſolves the divinity of any perſon or doctrine into miracles, as the chief external evidence that they are from God. This was the teſtimony which God gave to Moſes to ſatisfy the people of Iſrael that he had ſent him. Exod. iv. 1. And Moſes anſwered, and ſaid, But behold, they will not believe me, nor hearken unto my voice: for they will ſay, The Lord hath not appeared unto thee. Upon this God tells Moſes, that he would give him a power of miracles, to be an evidence to them, that they may believe, that the God of their fathers, of Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob, hath appeared unto thee. And all along in the Old Teſtament, when God ſent his prophets to make any new revelation, or upon any extraordinary meſſage, he always gave credit to them, by ſome ſign or wonder. And when he ſent his Son into the world, he bare witneſs to him, by more and greater miracles than Moſes or any of the prophets had wrought. And to this teſtimony both our Saviour himſelf and the apoſtles appeal, as the great evidence of the divinity of their doctrine. When John the Baptiſt ſent his diſciples to our Saviour, to be ſatisfied whether he was the Meſſias, he refers them to his miracles: Matth. xi. 4, 5. Go and ſhew John again thoſe things which ye do hear and ſee. The blind receive their ſight, and the lame walk, the lepers are cleanſed, and the deaf hear, the dead are raiſed up. And John v. 36. But I have greater witneſs than that of John: for the works which the Father hath given me to finiſh, the ſame works that I do, bear witneſs of me that the Father hath ſent me. And Acts ii. 22. Jeſus of Nazareth, a man approved of God among you, ἀπὸ τ̃ Θε῀ ἀποδεδειγμένον εἰς ὑμᾶς, a man demonſtrated by God to you by miracles, and wonders, and ſigns, which he did in the midſt of you. And Acts xiv. 3. it is ſaid, that when the apoſtles preached the goſpel, God gave teſtimony unto the word of his grace, and granted ſigns and wonders to be done by their hands. From all which it is plain that our religion appeals to miracles, as the great external confirmation of it.

3. Eſpecially if miracles have all the circumſtances of advantage given to them which they are capable of; if they be many and great, publick and unqueſtionable, and univerſal, and of long continuance. And ſuch were the miracles wrought by Moſes, and by our Saviour and his apoſtles, which for their nature and quality, for the number and continuance of them, and for all other circumſtances that may give credit to them, and argue them to be from God, are in no degree to be equalled by thoſe which any other religion hath pretended to.

And in theſe circumſtances, miracles alone are in moſt caſes a ſufficient proof of the divinity of a doctrine: for there is a great deal of difference in reaſon to be made between one or two ſtrange and miraculous effects, and thoſe not of the higheſt and moſt uuqueſtionable rank of miracles neither, privately wrought, and before few witneſſes; and a long continued ſeries of miracles of all kinds, and ſuch as are univerſally acknowledged to be above the power of nature, and thoſe publickly wrought in the face and view of the world, in every city and country, by a great many perſons for many years, yea, for many ages together. The former may be doubted of, but the latter carry ſo ſenſible a conviction with them, that it is not credible, that the divine goodneſs ſhould permit ſo great and overpowering a teſtimony to be given to a falſehood.

4. It cannot be denied, but that God doth ſometimes permit miracles to be wrought for the countenancing of a falſe doctrine. This the Heathens pretended to at their temples and oracles; and it is not incredible, that God ſhould permit the devil to do ſeveral ſtrange and extraordinary things; though it be certain that there was a great deal of cheat and impoſture mingled with them. To be ſure the ſcripture owns the working of miracles by falſe prophets. Moſes takes notice of it in his law, and provides againſt it as a caſe that might happen; and our Saviour expreſly foretels it, Matth. xxiv. and ſo does St Paul, 2 Theſſ. ii. that the man of ſin ſhould come after the working of Satan, with power, and ſigns, and wonders of lies; that is, ſhould work miracles, to countenance his falſe and impious doctrines. And the ſcripture likewiſe tells us, for what reaſon God does ſometimes permit this to be done. For the trial of the good: Deut. xiii. 3. For the Lord your God proveth you, to know whether you love the Lord your God with all your hearts. And for hardening of the wicked, by the juſt judgment of God: 2 Theſſ. ii. 10, 11, 12. Becauſe they received not the love of the truth, that they might be ſaved. And for this cauſe God ſhall ſend them ἐνεργείαν πλάνης, the efficacy of impoſture, that they ſhould believe a lie; that they all might be damned, who believed not the truth, but had pleaſure in unrighteouſneſs.

5. And laſtly, God never permits miracles to be wrought for the confirmation of a falſe doctrine, but he affords ſufficient marks, whereby thoſe who are free and impartial enquirers after truth, and ſincere lovers of it, may diſtinguiſh truth from impoſture. So our Saviour tells us, that the elect, that is, the true and ſincere Chriſtians, ſhould not be deceived by the ſigns and wonders of the falſe Chriſts and falſe prophets. And therefore he was not afraid of having the credit of his

doctrine weakened by foretelling that falſe prophets ſhould work miracles; becauſe he knew, when the devil had done his utmoſt, the difference would be apparent enough between the confirmation which he had given to the Chriſtian doctrine, and what the devil ſhould be able to give to his inſtruments. As,

1. Either the doctrine would be abſurd in itſelf, and ſuch as no miracles can confirm; as in the caſe which Moſes inſtanceth in, of a miracle wrought to ſeduce them from the worſhip of the one true God, who is naturally known, to the worſhip of idols. Or elſe,

2. It would be contrary to that doctrine which had already had a far greater and more divine confirmation. And this likewiſe is another reaſon intimated by Moſes, why the people ſhould not hearken to a prophet that would ſeduce them to idolatry, though he ſhould work a miracle; becauſe he hath ſpoken to turn you away from the Lord your God, which brought you out of the land of Egypt; that is, from that God who had demonſtrated himſelf to them by ſuch a ſeries of great and unqueſtionable miracles as ought in all reaſon to bear down any ſingle ſign and wonder.

And the caſe is the ſame, if miracles ſhould now be pretended for the confirmation of any thing plainly contrary to the Chriſtian doctrine, which being eſtabliſhed by ſuch miracles as never were wrought in the world upon any other occaſion, it cannot be thought reaſonable, that any evidence inferior to this ſhould be able to controul it, or to give credit to any thing that contradicted it. And in this caſe the Apoſtle has expreſly forbidden Chriſtians to hearken to a contrary doctrine, though they themſelves, or an angel from heaven, ſhould preach it, Gal. i. 8. Therefore St Paul expreſly lays down this rule, whereby we may judge what miraculous powers are from the Spirit of God, and what not, 1 Cor. xii. 1. Now concerning ſpiritual gifts, brethren, I would not have you ignorant, that is, what miraculous gifts are from the Spirit of God, and what not; and then, ver. 3. he gives this rule, Wherefore I give you to underſtand, that no man ſpeaking by the Spirit of God calleth Jeſus accurſed: and that no man can ſay, that Jeſus is the Lord, but by the Holy Ghoſt: that is, if any man pretend to be inſpired, and to be endowed with a miraculous power, and yet blaſphemeth Chriſt, this ſpirit is not from God: but if any man be endowed with this power, and acknowledge Chriſt, we may ſafely conclude this power to be from the Holy Ghoſt. The very ſame rule St John lays down yet more plainly, 1 John iv. 1, 2, 3. Believe not every ſpirit, that is, not every one that pretends to the gifts and inſpirations of the Spirit; but try the ſpirits, whether they are of God: becauſe many falſe prophets are gone out into the world. Hereby know ye the Spirit of God: Every ſpirit that confeſſeth that Jeſus Chriſt is come in the fleſh, is of God: and every ſpirit that confeſſeth not that Jeſus Chriſt is come in the fleſh, is not of God. And ver. 6. We are of God: he that knoweth God, heareth us; he that is not of God, heareth not us. Hereby know we the ſpirit of truth, and the ſpirit of error. This ſeems, at firſt ſight, to be a very odd rule, and what every falſe teacher, and every ſect may lay down in favour of themſelves; He that knoweth God, heareth us; he that knoweth not God, heareth not us; and nothing can make it reaſonable, but the conſideration that the Chriſtian religion being already ſo abundantly confirmed beyond contradiction, is itſelf become a rule to try ſpirits or miracles by. Or,

3. The miracles which falſe prophets work, are preſently confuted, and upon the ſpot. Thus Moſes confuted and conquered Pharaoh's magicians, by working miracles which they could not work; which forced them to yield the cauſe, and acknowledge that it was the finger of God. And ſo likewiſe Simon Magus, who had gained ſo great a reputation among the people by his ſorceries, as to be called the mighty power of God, was confuted by the apoſtles, who, by the laying on of hands, conferred a miraculous power on men; which he not being able to do, would have purchaſed it with money. And ſo Elymas the ſorcerer was ſtruck blind by St Paul. And the miracles of the Heathen temples and oracles, upon the preaching of the goſpel ceaſed, as being aſhamed of themſelves; as Porphyry, one of the bittereſt enemies of Chriſtianity, doth expreſly acknowledge. Or elſe,

Laſtly, The miracles wrought, or pretended to be wrought, to confirm falſe doctrines, are ſuch as do ſome way or other confute themſelves; or, if they be real, are ſufficiently detected to be the pranks of the devil, and not the great and glorious works of God. Such were the miracles of the Heathen deities, wrought ſo privately and obſcurely, and confeſſedly mixed with ſo much of impoſture, as to bring a juſt ſuſpicion upon them, that when they were real, the devil was the author of them. And ſuch were the miracles which are attributed to Mahomet; either groſsly abſurd and ridiculous, as that of part of the moon coming down into his ſleeve, and his remanding it into its place again; or elſe deſtitute of all proof and witneſs, as that of a camel's ſpeaking to him by night; and his pigeon whiſpering to him in his ear: which, if it had been intended for a miracle, the pigeon ſhould not have whiſpered, but have ſpoken out, that others might have heard it. But Mahomet was ſo conſcious to himſelf of his own defect in point of miracles, that he laid no weight upon them, being, as he ſaid, not ſent to convert the world by miracles, but to conquer them by force of arms.

And now I am ſorry I have occaſion to ſay it, but it is too true, that the miracles pretended to by the church of Rome, for the confirmation of their erroneous doctrines, are of the ſame ſtamp with theſe, taxed by ſeveral of their beſt writers, of impoſture and forgery, of fable and romance, ſo extravagant, and freakiſh, and fantaſtical, wrought without any neceſſity, and ſerving to no wiſe end, that they are ſo far from giving credit to their doctrines, that they are a mighty ſcandal to them, and to our common Chriſtianity: whereas the truly divine miracles, reported to us in ſcripture, how unlike are they to theſe? How venerable in themſelves, and in all the circumſtances with which they are related? never wrought but upon great neceſſity, and for excellent ends, full of benefit and advantage, of mercy and compaſſion to mankind; and, in a word, ſuch as are every way worthy of their author, having plain characters of the divine wiſdom and goodneſs ſtamped upon them.

And thus I have done with the firſt thing I propounded to ſpeak to, namely, that miracles are a divine teſtimony;

mony; and in what circumſtances, and with what cautions and limitations they are ſo. I ſhall, at preſent, only draw ſome inferences from what hath been diſcourſed upon this argument.

1. What has been ſaid may ſatisfy us of the truth and divinity of the Chriſtian doctrine, which had ſo eminent a teſtimony given to it from heaven, and did at firſt ſo ſtrangely prevail in the world, contrary to all human probability, not by might nor by power, but by the Spirit of the Lord. No man can ſuppoſe a religion in circumſtances of greater diſadvantage, and, upon all human accounts, more unlikely to ſuſtain and bear up itſelf, than Chriſtianity was. The firſt appearance of it was ſo weak, its beginnings ſo ſmall, and the inſtruments employed in the propagation of it ſo mean and deſpicable, that no man but would have concluded it muſt preſently have ſunk and come to nought; and no other reaſon can be given of the ſtrange ſucceſs and prevalency of it, but that it was of God, and therefore it could not be overthrown.

2. From hence we may judge how groundleſs the pretences are, which men now-a-days make to inſpiration and infallibility; becauſe this is not to be proved and made out any other way but by miracles. For either we muſt believe every pretence of this kind; and then we are at the mercy of every crafty and confident man, to be led by him into what deluſions he pleaſes: or we muſt only believe thoſe who give ſome teſtimony of their inſpiration: but the evidence of inſpiration was always miracles. This is the teſtimony which God hath always given to thoſe whom he hath ſent upon an extraordinary meſſage to mankind. And this is that which we reaſonably demand of our modern enthuſiaſts, and of the great pretender to infallibility, the Biſhop of Rome; becauſe nothing can be more vain, than for men to pretend to inſpiration, and an infallible ſpirit, without miracles. And yet I cannot learn that the Popes themſelves, among all their boundleſs privileges and powers, do ſo much as pretend to a power of miracles, which yet is the only thing that can, in reaſon, ſupport their pretences to infallibility.

3. You ſee what an immediate teſtimony from heaven God was pleaſed to give to the firſt preachers of the Chri-ſtian doctrine, to qualify them, with any probability of ſucceſs, to conteſt with the violent and almoſt invincible prejudices of men educated in a contrary religion, and which had the ſecular authority and laws on its ſide. For, having this divine ſeal given to their commiſſion, they did, as it were, carry the letters patents of heaven in their hands, and an authority paramount to that of human laws. And therefore the wiſdom of God, which does nothing which is ſuperfluous and unneceſſary, did not think the apoſtles ſufficiently armed and appointed for this deſign, by a commiſſion from the mouth of the Son of God, without this divine ſeal and teſtimony of miracles, as a viſible evidence of their divine commiſſion. And therefore our Saviour, after he had commiſſioned them to preach the goſpel to all nations, commanded them not to enter upon this work, nor to depart from Jeruſalem, till they had received the promiſe of the Father, that is, the miraculous gifts of the Holy Ghoſt, Acts i. 4. And ſo our Saviour explains it, Luke xxiv. 47. where, after he had commanded, that repentance and remiſſion of ſins ſhould be preached in his name among all nations, beginning at Jeruſalem, he adds, ver. 49. And behold, I ſend the promiſe of my Father upon you; but tarry ye in the city of Jeruſalem, until ye be endued with power from on high. And to the ſame purpoſe, Acts i. 8. But ye ſhall receive power after that the Holy Ghoſt is come upon you; by which he tells us, they were qualified to be witneſſes unto him, both in Jeruſalem, and in all Judea, and in Samaria, and unto the uttermoſt parts of the earth.

4. and laſtly, The conſideration of what hath been ſaid, doth juſtly upbraid us, that our religion, which hath ſuch evident marks of divinity upon it, and comes down to us confirmed by ſo many miracles, ſhould yet have ſo little efficacy upon the lives of the greateſt part of thoſe who call themſelves Chriſtians. It is true, miracles are now ceaſed among Chriſtians, our religion being ſufficiently eſtabliſhed by thoſe that were wrought at firſt; and now the greateſt miracle, in theſe latter ages, is a good man, a true and ſincere Chriſtian: but the laws of Chriſtianity are ſtill the ſame; and the motives and arguments to a good life are the ſame; and though the miraculous gifts of the Spirit have left the world, yet the ſealing and ſanctifying gifts of the Holy Ghoſt do ſtill remain. We cannot now ſpeak all languages, as the apoſtles did: but we may do that which is much better, and more pleaſing to God, we may live holy and virtuous lives. We have not that faith which works by miracles: but we may have that which is far more excellent, the faith which works by charity; which, if we believe St Paul, is more than to ſpeak with the tongues of men and angels, more than to propheſy, and to underſtand all myſteries and all knowledge.

The admirable piety and virtue of the firſt Chriſtians are ſtill upon record for our imitation: but I know not how it comes to paſs, we chuſe rather lazily to admire thoſe patterns, than vigorouſly to imitate them: as if the holineſs of thoſe times were alſo miraculous, and not intended for the imitation of ſucceeding ages; as if it were impoſſible for us now to lead ſuch lives as they did: as if heaven and earth, God and men, and all things, were altered ſince that time; as if the Chriſtian religion were now quite diſpirited, and had loſt all its vigour and force; and as if the Holy Spirit of God had, to all intents and purpoſes, forſaken the world, and were retired to the Father.

But our religion is ſtill the ſame it was; the precepts of it as reaſonable, and the promiſes of it as powerful as ever; God is ſtill the ſame he was; and Chriſt ſtill at the right hand of God, making interceſſion for us; and the Holy Spirit of God ſtill ready to aſſiſt us, to every good word and work.

To conclude: We have, beyond compariſon, the beſt and moſt reaſonable religion in the world; a religion which carries along with it the greateſt evidence of its truth, which contains the beſt rules and directions for a good life, which offers the moſt powerful aſſiſtance to the obedience of its laws, and gives the greateſt encouragements thereto, by the aſſurance of a bleſſed immortality in another world. Now, the better our religion is, our caſe is ſo much the worſe, if we be not made good by it. Philoſophy had ſome effect upon the world to make ſome men temperate, and chaſte, and juſt, and honeſt in their lives. And the Jewiſh religion (as weak and imperfect as it was, and though it was but the ſhadow of good things to come) hath yet left us many eminent examples of good and holy men. What then ſhall become of us, if the beſt inſtitution in the world, the bleſſed goſpel of the Son of God, have leſs effect upon us, than the doctrine of Pythagoras, and the law of Moſes had upon them? How ſhall we eſcape, if we neglect ſo great ſalvation, which at firſt began to be ſpoken by the Lord, and was confirmed unto us by them that heard him? God alſo bearing them witneſs, with ſigns, and wonders, and with divers miracles, and gifts of the Holy Ghoſt, according to his own will. To which bleſſed and glorious Trinity, be all honour and glory, now and for ever.

SERMON CCXXX.

Of the miracles wrought in confirmation of Chriſtianity.

HEB. ii. 4.

God alſo bearing them witneſs, both with ſigns and wonders, and with divers miracles, and gifts of the Holy Ghoſt, according to his own will.

The ſecond ſermon on this text:

I Have begun to diſcourſe upon theſe words, from which I told you three things offer themſelves to our conſideration.

Firſt, That miracles are a divine teſtimony to a perſon or doctrine. God is here ſaid to bear witneſs to the apoſtles, by ſigns, and wonders, and miracles.

Secondly, That God gave this teſtimony to the apoſtles, and firſt publiſhers of the goſpel, in a very eminent manner; for ſo the phraſe ſignifies, God bearing them witneſs, neſs, with ſigns, and wonders, and miracles; ſo many words to the ſame ſenſe, being purpoſely uſed to ſignify the greatneſs of the thing.

Thirdly, The reaſons why miracles are now ceaſed in the church, and have been for ſeveral ages; ſo that there have been no footſteps of this miraculous power for ſeveral ages paſt. The firſt I have ſpoken to, and proceed now to the Second thing which I propoſed to conſider, viz. That God gave teſtimony to the apoſtles and firſt publiſhers of Chriſtianity, in a very eminent manner; for ſo the expreſſion in the text ſignifies, where ſo many ſeveral words are uſed for the ſame thing, to expreſs, according to the manner of the Hebrew phraſe, the greatneſs of the thing; God bearing them witneſs, both with ſigns, and wonders, and divers miracles, and gifts of the Holy Ghoſt, that is, with many and great miracles, καὶ μερισμοῖς, and diſtributions of the Holy Ghoſt, according to his own will; that is, God diſtributed theſe ſeveral miraculous powers and gifts among the apoſtles and firſt preachers of the goſpel; not all to every one of them, but ſome to one, and ſome to another, as to him ſeemed beſt, and was moſt for the benefit and edification of the church.

The hiſtory of it, in ſhort, is this. When our bleſſed Saviour aſcended into heaven, he promiſed to ſend down his Spirit in miraculous gifts upon his apoſtles, to give credit to his doctrine, and to qualify them for the more ſpeedy planting and propagating of it in the world; and, accordingly, not many days after he was aſcended into heaven, as an evidence of the power and glory he was inveſted withal, he, according to his promiſe, immediately before his aſcenſion, ſent down the Holy Ghoſt upon the apoſtles in a viſible manner, that is, in the form of fiery cloven tongues, as an emblem of one of the principal gifts they were endowed withal, viz. the knowledge and ability of ſpeaking ſeveral languages, which they had never learned. And this happened upon the day of Pentecoſt, that ſo the goſpel might exactly correſpond to the diſpenſation of the law, which was the type and figure of it. And therefore, as our Saviour died at the time of the Jewiſh paſſover, which was the type of his ſufferings; ſo the goſpel, which was the perfection and fulfilling of the law, began to be publiſhed at the very ſame time that the law was given from mount Sinai, viz. at the end of the ſeven weeks after the paſſover. For at this time the Holy Ghoſt deſcended upon the apoſtles in miraculous powers and gifts; when this new law was to come forth out of Zion, and the law of the Lord from Jeruſalem.

And among theſe gifts, the firſt we find mentioned was the gift of tongues; without which, the goſpel muſt, of neceſſity, have been very ſlowly propagated in the world: for had the apoſtles been firſt to learn the ſeveral languages of the nations they were to preach to, how tedious a work would that have been? it requiring the induſtry of ſome years, to gain ſo perfect a maſtery of a ſtrange language, as to be able to uſe it with that freedom and readineſs which is neceſſary for ſuch a work.

And this gift all the apoſtles had, becauſe they had all occaſion for it, being deſigned by our Saviour to be the chief publiſhers of his goſpel to the world. And this gift did alſo continually reſide upon them, and not only at ſome times, as ſome other gifts did, becauſe they had conſtant uſe of this gift of tongues.

The interpreting of things ſpoken in a ſtrange tongue was alſo a gift diſtinct from the gift of tongues, though attending it; inſomuch that ſome perſons had one, and ſome the other. So the Apoſtle tells us, 1 Cor. xii. 10. To one is given divers kinds of tongues; and to another the interpretation of tongues. The occaſion of which was plainly this: It might happen, and often did, that the auditory might conſiſt of people of ſeveral nations; now, becauſe no man could ſpeak more than one language at once, it was convenient others ſhould have the gift of interpreting what was ſpoken, to thoſe who underſtood not the language in which it was ſpoken, that ſo all might receive the benefit of what was delivered, and be edified thereby. So that here were two ſeveral gifts ſerving the ſame end, viz. the conveying of the knowledge of the goſpel to mankind, in a more ſpeedy way than it could have been done by ordinary means; and theſe were very plain and ſenſible miracles, unqueſtionably ſupernatural, and evident to the ſenſes of all men.

So that the goſpel, wherever it was preached, carried its own teſtimony along with it, and was confirmed by the very manner of its conveyance and delivery: and well might men entertain it as a divine doctrine, when the very manner and the means whereby it was publiſhed was a miracle.

And here I cannot but take notice, how contrary the arts and the ways of the church of Rome are to the methods of God, and that when he was at the expence of ſo many miracles to publiſh this doctrine to the world, they ſhould uſe ſo much induſtry and violence to conceal it. God was pleaſed to endow the firſt preachers of it with the gift of tongues, that their ſound might go into all the earth, and their words to the end of the world; that there might be no nation nor language where this ſaving knowledge might not come; that the ſermons which they preached, and the prayers which they put up to God in publick, for themſelves and the people, and all the offices of religion which they performed, might be fully underſtood by all, and that all might join in them, and have the benefit and comfort of them; that their underſtandings might be informed and enlightened by what was ſpoken, and their affections raiſed and warmed by their underſtandings, and their wills excited by their affections; and that the effect of all this might appear in their lives and practice. Thus it was in the primitive Chriſtian church: but, in the church of Rome, things are managed in a quite contrary way, and have been for ſeveral ages. The doctrine of ſalvation, as it is contained and delivered in the holy ſcripture, is a ſealed book, which the people are not thought worthy to open or look into. This bread of life which came down from heaven, is like the ſhew-bread among the Jews, which none may eat but the prieſt only, unleſs it be by extraordinary favour, and particular licence from the biſhop. The people, indeed, come together, and are preſent at the prayers and devotion of the prieſt, but the prieſt that prays is a barbarian to them, and all the while the underſtanding of the people is unfruitful, and they cannot ſay amen, becauſe they underſtand not what he ſays.

But

But, let any man ſhew me the leaſt intimation in ſcripture or antiquity, that our Saviour, or his apoſtles, or the primitive church, ever uſed this way; and yet the danger of error and hereſy was as great then as it is now. So that the church of Rome muſt pretend themſelves wiſer than our Saviour and his apoſtles, and to be more careful to prevent hereſy in the church, than they were. This they are loath to ſay; and yet they muſt ſay it, if they will juſtify their own doings. But the plain truth is, there is another and truer reaſon for it, though they are not willing to own it, and that is this; if the ſcriptures were permitted to the people in a language which they underſtand, the errors of their church would be diſcovered and laid open, and men would plainly diſcern how contrary many of their doctrines and practices are, to thoſe of our Saviour and his apoſtles; for every one that doth evil hateth the light, neither cometh to the light, leſt his deeds ſhould be diſcovered.

Secondly, The next miraculous gift I ſhall mention, after the gift of tongues, is the gift of prophecy, or foretelling things future, which was always looked upon as an evidence of inſpiration. And this we find mentioned 1 Cor. xii. 10. To another prophecy, and in ſeveral other places; and to this gift the Apoſtle gives a great preeminence, 1 Cor. xiv. 1. Covet ſpiritual gifts: but rather that ye may propheſy; becauſe foretelling of things to come was always eſteemed by mankind an evidence of a perſon divinely inſpired, and, conſequently, was one of the greateſt teſtimonies of the truth of Chriſtianity; and this the angel that appeared to St John particularly takes notice of, Rev. xix. 10. The teſtimony of Jeſus is the ſpirit of prophecy. The prophecies of that book were to be a ſtanding teſtimony of the truth of Chriſtianity in all ages of the church.

Thirdly, The next gift is that of healing all manner of diſeaſes. And this the apoſtles ſeem generally to have had, and the elders of the church alſo, whoſe peculiar office it was to pray over the ſick, and to anoint them with oil; and, upon their prayers, God was pleaſed to grant miraculous recoveries, as we find expreſly promiſed, James v. 14, 15. Is any ſick among you? let him call call for the elders of the church, and let them pray over him, anointing him with oil in the name of the Lord: and the prayer of faith ſhall ſave the ſick, and the Lord ſhall raiſe him up.

This miraculous power we find likewiſe mentioned to be conferred on the apoſtles in our Saviour's life-time, when he firſt gave them commiſſion to preach the goſpel to the Jews, Mark vi. 12, 13. where it is ſaid, that they went out, and preached that men ſhould repent. And they caſt out many devils, and anointed with oil many that were ſick, and healed them.

And now, that this miraculous gift is ceaſed, there is no reaſon why the mere ceremony of anointing with oil ſhould continue, which yet is ſtill uſed in the church of Rome, and made a ſacrament, though it ſignify nothing: for they do not pretend to heal men by it; nay, they pretend the contrary, becauſe they never uſe it, but in extremity, and where they look upon the perſon as paſt recovery; and if they did not think ſo, they would not uſe it.

But beſides the healing, with this ſolemnity of anointing with oil, and with prayer, which ſeems to have been uſed by the elders of the church only upon thoſe who were members of the church, there was likewiſe a general gift of healing, which the apoſtles exerciſed upon all occaſions wherever they came; and this was performed only by laying their hands on the ſick. And this we find promiſed by our Saviour to his apoſtles, when he gave them commiſſion to preach the goſpel to all the world, immediately before his aſcenſion; and not only to the apoſtles, but to thoſe who ſhould believe upon their preaching: Mark xvi. 17, 18. Theſe ſigns ſhall follow them that believe: in my name ſhall they caſt out devils, &c. and then it follows, they ſhall lay hands on the ſick, and they ſhall recover.

Fourthly, The power of raiſing the dead, which hath always been eſteemed one of the greateſt and moſt unqueſtionable miracles of all other. A principal part of the apoſtles office was to be witneſſes of our Saviour's reſurrection from the dead, whereby he was ſo powerfully demonſtrated to be the Son of God. But becauſe this was a ſtrange relation, and not eaſy to be credited, by thoſe who were ſtrangers to the apoſtles, and had never known them before; therefore, that they might witneſs this with more authority, God was pleaſed to endow them with a miraculous power of all kinds; and, particularly, with a power of raiſing the dead, and then there was no difficulty in receiving their teſtimony concerning our Saviour's reſurrection, when men ſaw them in his name raiſe others from the dead. And of this we have two inſtances in the Acts of the Apoſtles; of St Peter's raiſing Dorcas, Acts ix. and St Paul's raiſing Eutychus, Acts xx. And Irenæus, who lived in the age after the apoſtles, tells us, that, in his time, this power continued among Chriſtians.

Fifthly, Another miraculous gift was that of diſcerning ſpirits; the principal uſe of which was, to try and judge who were true prophets. And of this the Apoſtle ſpeaks, 1 Cor. xiv. 29. Let the prophets ſpeak two or three, and let the other judge. And ver. 32. The ſpirits of the prophets are ſubject to the prophets. And this is likewiſe called, by the ſame apoſtle, the gift of diſcerning ſpirits. 1 Cor. xii. 10. To another is given the diſcerning of ſpirits. Thoſe who pretended to this gift were tried by the biſhops and elders of the church, as the prophets were tried among the Jews by the Sanhedrim. And of theſe kind of aſſemblies among the Chriſtians, for the trial of prophets, Euſebius ſpeaks particularly in his fifth book.

And it ſhould ſeem likewiſe that this gift of diſcerning ſpirits extended alſo to the diſcovery of the ſecrets of mens hearts; by the revealing whereof, unbelievers were many times ſuddenly ſtruck and convinced; as may very probably be collected from 1 Cor. xiv. 24, 25. But if all propheſy, and there come in one that believeth not, or one unlearned; he is convinced of all, he is judged of all. And thus are the ſecrets of his heart made manifeſt; and ſo falling down on his face, he will worſhip God, and report that God is in you of a truth.

And, upon this miraculous gift of knowing the ſecrets of mens hearts, it ſeems to be very probable, that that which is commonly called the power of the keys did depend:

depend: I mean, the power of remitting or retaining sins: for they who had the privilege of knowing mens hearts, might do this upon certain grounds, and were secured from mistake in the exercise of their power upon particular persons; which the priests and ministers of the church now are not, nor can be; because they cannot see into mens hearts, whether they be truly penitent, and qualified for forgiveness or not. For I cannot easily believe but that those words of our Saviour, Whose sins ye remit, they are remitted; and whose sins ye retain, they are retained, were intended to signify something more than a mere declaration of the promises and threatenings of the gospel, which any man might make, as well as the apostles and ministers of the church. For that God will forgive the penitent, and that he will not pardon the sinner, except he repent, is as true from any man's mouth, as from an Apostle's: and as to the absolution of this or that particular person, though a minister, by the skill and knowledge of his profession, is ordinarily and reasonably presumed, by virtue of his office, to be a better judge of a man's repentance, than other persons are, and therefore may, with more authority and satisfaction to the penitent, declare his judgment and opinion concerning him; yet, not being able to see into his heart, he may be mistaken concerning him; and if he be, his declaring his sins to be forgiven, that is, his absolution of him, will do him no good: and, on the other hand, his refusal to absolve him, if he be truly penitent, will do him no harm. As the judgment of a skilful lawyer is of greater authority, and more satisfactory to us, concerning our title to an estate, than the opinion of another man, who is not of the profession, nor presumed to have the like skill; but yet, for all this, his judgment does not alter the case; and if in truth the law be otherwise, our title is bad, for all this skilful man's opinion of the goodness of it.

And thus much is granted by the church of Rome, that, if the priest be mistaken in the use of the keys, and gives absolution to one that is not truly penitent, his sins are not remitted; or, if a person be excommunicated that is not truly guilty, his sins are not retained: what he binds on earth, is not bound in heaven; and he whom he looſeth and abſolves on earth, is not abſolved in heaven. But the Proteſtants go farther, and do not only make a miſtaken abſolution or excommunication void in itſelf; but they do not make the abſolution of the prieſt at all neceſſary to the forgiveneſs of ſins, but only convenient, for the ſatisfaction and comfort of the penitent. For which reaſon, our church does not require a formal abſolution to be given to the dying penitent, unleſs he himſelf deſire it; which is a certain argument, that, in the judgment of our church, the abſolution of the prieſt is not neceſſary to the forgiveneſs and ſalvation of the penitent. For, had they thought it neceſſary, they would have injoined the prieſt to give it to every one whom he judged penitent, whether he deſired it or not.

So that the abſolution of the prieſt, having only the authority of a man, preſumed to be ſkilful in his office, but no certain effect, in caſe he be miſtaken (as he very eaſily may be, and if he be, as he ought to be, a charitable man, no doubt often is) I cannot think but that this power of remitting and retaining ſins, ſo ſolemnly conferred on the Apoſtles by our Saviour, had ſomething in it that was miraculous and extraordinary, and did ſuppoſe the knowledge of mens hearts, and that they were not miſtaken in the application of this power to particular perſons; and, conſequently, that, in that miraculous and extraordinary degree, it was peculiar to the Apoſtles and their times. For I cannot eaſily be brought to believe, that the meaning of this great promiſe to the Apoſtles ſhould be only this, Verily, verily, I ſay unto you, Whatſoever ye ſhall bind on earth, if ye be not miſtaken, as in many caſes ye will be, and in any caſe ye may be, ſhall be bound in heaven; and whatſoever ye ſhall looſe on earth, ſhall be looſed in heaven. And if more be meant than this, it muſt ſuppoſe a miraculous power of diſcerning the ſincerity of mens hearts.

And, therefore, when the power of the keys is conferred on the miniſters of the goſpel, in our form of ordination, I ſuppoſe that only one, or both of theſe two things is intended by it, viz. a power to admit perſons into the Chriſtian church by baptiſm, in which is ſealed to them the remiſſion of ſins; and to caſt perſons out of the communion munion of the Chriſtian church, by excommunication, and the cenſures of it: and an authority, by virtue of their office, to declare to men the terms of pardon and forgiveneſs, which cannot be that infallible power of abſolving which the Apoſtles had.

And I am the rather induced to think ſo, becauſe I find it promiſed to the Apoſtles, together with the miraculous power and efficacy of prayer, which St Chryſoſtom reckons among the miraculous gifts, which he ſays were ceaſed in his time. That it was thus promiſed, you may ſee, Matth. xviii. 18, 19. Verily I ſay unto you, Whatſoever ye ſhall bind on earth, ſhall be bound in heaven; and whatſoever ye ſhall looſe on earth ſhall be looſed in heaven. Again I ſay unto you, that if two of you ſhall agree on earth, as touching any thing that they ſhall aſk, it ſhall be done for them of my Father which is in heaven. But ſurely no man will pretend that any two Chriſtians or miniſters have now this power, that whatever they ſhall agree together to aſk of God, which is fit and lawful, in behalf of any perſon, God will certainly grant it upon their requeſt. In the ſame ſenſe I underſtand ſeveral other texts, concerning the efficacy of the prayers of the Apoſtles and firſt Chriſtians, as in a great meaſure miraculous, and peculiar to the firſt times of Chriſtianity. And I think any man that attentively conſiders them, will think that they cannot well be underſtood otherwiſe. Such as theſe, Matth. xxi. 22. And all things whatſoever ye ſhall aſk in prayer, believing, ye ſhall receive. Mark xi. 24. I ſay unto you, What things ſoever ye deſire when ye pray, believe that ye receive them, and ye ſhall have them. John xiv. 14. If ye ſhall aſk any thing in my name, I will do it; and, chap. xv. 17. If ye abide in me, and my words abide in you, ye ſhall aſk what ye will, and it ſhall be done unto you. 1 John iii. 22. And whatſoever we aſk, we receive of him; and, chap. v. 14, 15. And this is the confidence which we have in him, that, if we aſk any thing according to his will, he heareth us. And if we know that he hear us, whatſoever we aſk, we know that we have the petitions that we deſired of him. Theſe promiſes I take to contain ſomething extraordinary, and peculiar to the firſt times of Chriſtianity. And this will appear exceeding probable, if we conſider the occaſion and circumſtances of theſe promiſes, which are ſo often joined with the promiſe of a miraculous power, as in the place I mentioned before, Matth. xviii. 18, 19. where, after the power of binding and looſing, it immediately follows, that, if two of you ſhall agree on earth touching any thing they ſhall aſk, it ſhall be done for them of my Father which is in heaven. Matth. xxi. 22. and Mark xi. 24. ſays our Saviour there to his diſciples, Have faith in God: for verily I ſay unto you, whoſoever ſhall ſay to this mountain, Be thou removed, and be thou caſt into the ſea, and ſhall not doubt in his heart, but ſhall believe that thoſe things which he ſaith ſhall come to paſs, he ſhall have whatſoever he ſaith. And then immediately it follows, Therefore I ſay unto you, Whatſoever things ye deſire when ye pray, believe that ye receive them, and ye ſhall have them; that is, whatever ye deſire of God to do, he ſhall miraculouſly do it upon your prayers. So likewiſe John xiv. 12, 13, 14. Verily, verily, I ſay unto you, He that believeth on me, the works that I do ſhall he do alſo; and greater works than theſe ſhall he do, becauſe I go unto my Father. And whatſoever ye ſhall aſk in my name, that will I do, that the Father may be glorified in the Son. If ye ſhall aſk any thing in my name, I will do it. Still you ſee this extraordinary efficacy of prayer is joined with the power of miracles, as one part and branch of it. More particularly, we find the forgiveneſs of the ſins of thoſe whom they prayed for expreſly promiſed, 1 John v. 15. And if we know that he heareth us, whatſoever we aſk, we know that we have the petitions that we deſired of him. And then it follows, If any man ſee his brother ſin a ſin which is not unto death, he ſhall aſk, and he ſhall give him life for the ſin that is not unto death. Where forgiveneſs of ſins, upon the prayers of Chriſtians for one another, is promiſed, except in the caſe of a ſin unto death, by which is meant apoſtaſy from Chriſtianity to the Heathen idolatry, which is the reaſon of the caution which follows: Little children, keep yourſelves from idols. And this extraordinary efficacy of prayer, we find promiſed in a more eſpecial manner to the elders of the church, James v. 14, 15. Is any ſick among you? let him call for the elders of the church, and let them pray over him, anointing him with oil in the name of the Lord; and the prayer of faith ſhall ſave the ſick, and the Lord ſhall raiſe him up: and if he have committed ſins, they ſhall be forgiven him.

In comparing of all theſe texts, it ſeems plain, that both the power of remitting and retaining ſins, and the ſtrange efficacy of prayer, which were promiſed to the Apoſtles and firſt Chriſtians, had ſomething miraculous and extraordinary in them, and were peculiar to the firſt ages of the church. I will not be peremptory in theſe things; but this ſeems to be the moſt genuine and reaſonable interpretation of theſe texts.

Sixthly, And beſides theſe which I have mentioned, there was likewiſe a power of inflicting corporal puniſhments and diſeaſes upon ſcandalous and obſtinate Chriſtians; which is in ſcripture called, a delivering men up to Satan, for the deſtroying or tormenting of their bodies, that their ſouls might be ſaved at laſt. And of this kind were thoſe diſeaſes which befel the Corinthians, for their diſorderly and irregular carriage at the ſacrament, of which the Apoſtle ſpeaks, 1 Cor. xi. 30. For this cauſe many are weak and ſickly among you, and many ſleep; that is, to ſome of them, theſe diſtempers proved mortal. And we find that this power did, in ſome caſes, extend to the inflicting of ſudden and preſent death, as in the caſe of Ananias and Sapphira. And, indeed, conſidering that Chriſtianity was at firſt deſtitute of any countenance from the civil power, ſome ſuch power as this was neceſſary to maintain the authority of the Apoſtles againſt the contumacious and diſobedient.

And then, laſtly, there was the power of caſting out devils in the name of Chriſt, which was common to the meaneſt Chriſtian, and continued in the church a long time after moſt of the other gifts were ceaſed, as Tertullian, Minucius Felix, and Arnobius, do moſt expreſly teſtify concerning their times.

Thus you ſee that there were almoſt all imaginable kinds of miraculous powers conferred upon the Apoſtles and firſt Chriſtians, to give the greater eſtabliſhment and confirmation to the Chriſtian doctrine.

All the reflection I ſhall make upon what has been ſaid, ſhall be this: Since our religion comes down to us confirmed by ſuch miraculous powers, we ought to take the more earneſt heed to it, to believe it more ſtedfaſtly, and to practiſe it more carefully in our lives. For if the word ſpoken by angels was ſtedfaſt, and every tranſgreſſion and diſobedience received a juſt recompence of reward; how ſhall we eſcape, if we neglect ſo great ſalvation?

SERMON CCXXXI.

Of the miracles wrought in confirmation of Chriſtianity.

HEB. ii. 4.

God alſo bearing them witneſs, both with ſigns and wonders, and with divers miracles, and gifts of the Holy Ghoſt, according to his own will.

The third ſermon on this text.

IN theſe words, three things offer themſelves to our conſideration:

Firſt, That miracles are a divine teſtimony given to a perſon or doctrine.

Secondly, That God gave this teſtimony to the Apoſtles, and firſt publiſhers of the goſpel, in a very eminent manner. Of theſe two I have diſcourſed at large, and now proceed to the Third and laſt thing which I propoſed, viz. The reaſon why theſe miracles are now ceaſed in the Chriſtian church, and have been for a long time, ſo that there have been no footſteps of this miraculous power for many ages. And, in the handling of this argument, I ſhall do theſe three things:

I. Shew

I. Shew that theſe miraculous gifts and powers have ceaſed in the Chriſtian church for ſeveral ages.

II. I ſhall aſſign a plain reaſon of the ceaſing of miracles after ſuch a time.

III. Anſwer the objection from the innumerable miracles which have been, and are ſtill pretended to be, wrought in the church of Rome.

I. I ſhall ſhew, that theſe miraculous powers and gifts have ceaſed in the church for ſeveral ages. That they are now ceaſed, we find by certain experience; nor are they pretended to at this day, by any part of the Chriſtian church, except the church of Rome, where yet they are nothing ſo plentiful now-a-days, as they were in thoſe ignorant ages, from the time of the degeneracy and corruption of the weſtern church down to the reformation; and now chiefly pretended to in thoſe parts of the Roman communion, where their religion reigns without any contradiction, and the people are under the awe and laſh of the inquiſition, ſo that they dare neither gainſay, nor offer to detect the forgery and impoſture of them; and yet here is leſs need of them, becauſe the people are all of a mind, and believe as the church would have them, and dare not for their lives do otherwiſe. For, where the inquiſition rules, and ignorance, the mother, not of true devotion, but of credulity and ſuperſtition, is carefully preſerved, there is no need of miracles to make people believe what they have a mind to: but, in other places, where their religion is oppoſed, and there is great occaſion for them, both to confirm thoſe of their own religion, and to reduce hereticks and unbelievers, there is little or no pretence to them, as I ſhall ſhew by and by.

So that all over the Chriſtian church, except in the church of Rome, all pretence to theſe miraculous powers and gifts is now ceaſed, and hath been for many ages. St Chryſoſtom, ſpeaking of his time, which was about four hundred years after Chriſt, ſays, that theſe miraculous powers were then ceaſed, and ſpeaks as if no foot ſteps of them were left in the paſtors and governors o the church, much leſs among private Chriſtians; for which he gives us this ſubſtantial reaſon, which I ſhall ſpeak to afterwards, that Chriſtianity, being now already eſtabliſhed by miracles, there was no reaſon to expect the continuance of them. St Auguſtine, indeed, ſome time after, ſpeaks of many miraculous things done at ſepulchres of the martyrs. But this doth not contradict what St Chryſoſtom had ſaid, becauſe he ſpeaks of the living teachers and members of the church, in whom theſe miraculous gifts and powers were ceaſed; but that the ſame miraculous cures were wrought, upon the prayers of Chriſtians, at the tombs of the martyrs, is a confirmation of the thing, that God deſigned to honour the primitive Chriſtians and martyrs with theſe gifts, and not to continue them to the ſucceeding ages of the church; and, therefore, God was pleaſed that ſo many wonderful things ſhould be done at their ſepulchres, to ſhew that he did intend, that theſe miraculous powers and gifts ſhould die with them, and continue no longer in the living members of the church.

II. I ſhall now aſſign a plain reaſon of the ceaſing of theſe miraculous gifts after ſuch a time; namely, becauſe there was not the like neceſſity and occaſion for them, that there was before. They were at firſt in a great degree neceſſary to introduce the goſpel into the world, which was deſtitute of all other helps and advantages, to recommend it to the eſteem and liking of mankind; to give credit to a new doctrine and religion, ſo contrary to the inveterate prejudices of men, bred up in another religion very different from this, and ſo oppoſite to the luſts and intereſts of men; to make way for the more ſpeedy and effectual planting of this religion in the world; to ſtrengthen the hands of the firſt publiſhers of it, and to give credit to their teſtimony, concerning that ſtrange relation of theirs, of the reſurrection of Chriſt from the dead; to be a ſenſible evidence and conviction to men, of the divinity of that new doctrine which was preached unto them, and to ſupport and confirm them in the belief and profeſſion of it, againſt thoſe terrible ſufferings and perſecutions, which, for the ſake of it, they were expoſed to. For theſe reaſons, God was pleaſed to ſhed abroad ſo plentifully theſe miraculous gifts, among the firſt preachers and profeſſors of Chriſtianity; and as theſe reaſons ceaſed or abated, ſo did theſe miraculous powers and gifts: and, therefore, as ſoon as the goſpel was planted, which it was in a great part of the then known world, during the lives of the Apoſtles, the gift of tongues ceaſed, and we hear no more of it, becauſe there was no farther uſe and occaſion for it. Other gifts did continue longer, but abated by degrees, according as Chriſtianity gained ground and eſtabliſhment, and they grew leſs frequent, as there was leſs need of them. The power of caſting out devils, which was moſt common, for every Chriſtian had it, continued longeſt; and there was reaſon it ſhould continue ſo long as the devil reigned, and the Pagan idolatry was kept up, to ſhew that the Spirit of Chriſt was ſuperior to the devil, and would finally overcome him, and overthrow his kingdom, according to that of St John, 1 John iv. 4. Ye are of God, little children, and have overcome them, becauſe greater is he that is in you, than he that is in the world. And this appeared, in that they were able, in the name of Chriſt, to caſt him out wherever he had taken poſſeſſion, which God permitted to be very frequent in thoſe times, for the more glorious manifeſtation of his power, in caſting out the prince of this world. But when the powers of the world became Chriſtian, and the Heathen idolatry was every where overthrown, and Satan's kingdom every where deſtroyed, then this miraculous gift alſo ceaſed, there being no farther occaſion for it. And now, that the kingdoms of the world were become the kingdoms of the Lord and of his Chriſt, and that the goſpel was planted, and had taken firm root, and was fully ſettled and eſtabliſhed, theſe miraculous powers, which were at firſt neceſſary, to balance the mighty difficulties and oppoſitions which Chriſtianity met withal, and to ſupply the want of all manner of countenance from the civil authority, were withdrawn and did ceaſe, becauſe there was no need of their longer continuance.

Beſides that it is to be conſidered, that thoſe miraculous powers, which manifeſted themſelves in the firſt ages of Chriſtianity, were intended by God to give a ſtanding confirmation to it in after-ages; as the miracles that were wrought at the giving of the law, and the bringing of the children of Iſrael into Canaan, were deſigned for a ſtanding confirmation of the Jewiſh religion, the memory whereof was ſo carefully preſerved, and tranſmitted

III. And laſt place, To anſwer that objection from the innumerable miracles which have been, and are ſtill pretended to be, wrought in the church of Rome. And ſo indeed we find that the Arians, and other hereticks in former times, pretended to miracles, for the confirmation of their errors, a good while after miracles were generally ceaſed in the Chriſtian church, which ſhews that this is no new or ſtrange thing.

Firſt, That the moſt learned and judicious writers of the Roman church do acknowledge, that there is no neceſſity of miracles now, and that Chriſtianity is ſufficiently eſtabliſhed, by the miracles which were wrought at firſt to give teſtimony to it; and, therefore, not being neceſſary, without manifeſt evidence of fact, it is not neceſſary to believe that they are continued.

Secondly, The miracles pretended to by the church of Rome, are of very doubtful and ſuſpected credit, even among the wiſeſt perſons of their own communion; and, therefore, I hope they do not expect we ſhould give much credit to thoſe miracles, of the truth of which they themſelves are in ſo much doubt, that they are generally looked upon, by the more prudent and learned among them, as pious frauds, to raiſe and entertain the devotion of the weak and ignorant. Several of them have been convicted of fraud and impoſture, not only here in England, in times of Popery, and at the beginning of the reformation: but in other countries, where that religion bears ſway.

And it is obſervable, that the greateſt part of the hiſtory of theſe miracles, which they call Legends, were written in the romance-age, and much in the ſame ſtile, with the like wantonneſs and extravagancy of fancy, and fulſom abſurdity of invention, and it is to be feared with the like regard to truth. And I know not whether romances had not their name, as well as their original, from theſe Roman legends, of which they are exact copies and imitations; and as they were ſacred, ſo thoſe were a ſort of civil legends, in which they repreſented their heroes doing the like abſurd feats and miracles in chivalry, as their ſaints in their legends are ſaid to do in religion; and they were both written by the lazy and unlearned monks, and by them dreſſed up and fitted to the guſt of thoſe ignorant and ſuperſtitious ages.

And yet theſe legends or lying wonders have not only been put into the hands of the people, but leſſons out of them have been taken, as out of the ſcriptures, and diſtributed into the publick offices of their church, to be read there, as the ſcriptures are, and inſtead of them; only with this difference, that the people are permitted to have the ſcriptures only in an unknown tongue, but the legends, out of which theſe leſſons are taken, they are permitted to have at home in their own tongue; as if there were no danger of error and hereſy from falſe ſtories, but only from the word of truth. And herein is remarkably fulfilled that prophecy concerning the followers of Antichriſt, 2 Theſſ. ii. 11. That, becauſe they received not the truth in the love of it, God would ſend them ſtrong deluſions, ἐνέργειαν πλάνης, the efficacy of impoſture, that they ſhould believe a lie. And how could they more ſolemnly declare the belief and love of lies, than by putting theſe ridiculous fables into the publick offices of the church, in place of the holy ſcriptures; and at the ſame time that they deny to the people the uſe of the ſcriptures in a known tongue, to permit them the uſe, and to recommend to them the reading of theſe lying legends, out of which theſe ridiculous leſſons are taken?

Thirdly, The miracles of the church of Rome, ſuppoſing ſeveral of them to be true, have ſuch marks and characters upon them, as render it very ſuſpicious that they are not operations of God, or good ſpirits; but the working of Satan. If any man have but the patience to rake into theſe dunghills, and to read over theſe legends, even as they have, by the later collectors and compilers, been purged and reformed, he ſhall find the miracles recited in them, to be generally of one ſtamp, very fooliſh and abſurd, frivolous and trifling, wrought without any neceſſity, upon no good occaſion, to no wiſe end, and purpoſe; ſo that one may know them, by their very countenance, to be the tricks and pranks of the devil; and not the great and glorious works of God, ſuch as are the miracles recorded in the holy ſcriptures.

Fourthly, The miracles of the church of Rome, taking them for true, are very impertinently and unſeaſonably wrought. When and where there is no need and occaſion for them, they are very rife and frequent: but where there is greateſt occaſion for them, and moſt reaſon to expect them, they are either not at all, or very rarely ſo much as pretended to. In times and places where their religion did moſt abſolutely bear ſway, and few or none durſt oppoſe it, and where the doctrines, which they pretended to confirm by theſe miracles, were moſt generally believed, as in thoſe long, dark, and ignorant times before the reformation, and now in Italy and Spain, where the inquiſition forceth them all to be of one belief, or to profeſs to be ſo; in theſe times and places, where there was leaſt need and occaſion for miracles, then and there did they moſt abound, even more, if we may believe their hiſtories, for ſeveral ages before the reformation, than in the times of our Saviour and his Apoſtles. But ſince the reformation, and that many of their doctrines are called in queſtion, and diſbelieved, miracles are grown rare, and almoſt ceaſed, even in Popiſh countries, and they have had but very ill ſucceſs with thoſe few they have pretended to; witneſs the miracle at Angiers in France, of a child appearing over the altar in the time of maſs, to convince all people of the doctrine of tranſubſtantiation, with which the Papiſts made ſuch a noiſe here in England about fourteen or fifteen years ago, and which at laſt was diſcovered to be an artificial juggle and contrivance of ſome cunning prieſt, and publiſhed to the world for a cheat, by the honeſt and worthy biſhop of that place.

But, where there ſeems to be moſt need of them, they are moſt wanting; as for the converſion of Heathens, and the conviction of heretick infidels. For the converſion of Heathens, in which caſe, if men did ſincerely deſign the propagation of the true and uncorrupted Chriſtianity, I do not ſee why miracles might not yet reaſonably be expected; but yet, for all this, we hear of very few miracles, not ſo much as the gift of tongues, even upon this occaſion. In the firſt planting of the Weſt Indies, we hear of no miracles, except the moſt prodigious cruelties that ever were in the world, to the infinite ſcandal of the Chriſtian name. And in the Eaſt Indies, and China, Xaverius and the firſt miſſionaries ſpeak with no aſſurance of any miracles wrought by them; and ſince that time they have ſo depraved the Chriſtian religion there, by concealing the moſt eſſential part of it, the death and ſufferings of our Saviour, as if they were aſhamed of the croſs of Chriſt, that it is not credible that God ſhould vouchſafe the countenance of miracles to thoſe who preach another goſpel.

And then for the conviction of heretics, (as they are pleaſed to call us Proteſtants), one would think miracles, ſince they have that power, would be very proper for that purpoſe to be wrought among them; as now here in England, where they are continually endeavouring (but eſpecially of late with more than uſual vigour and hopes) to reſtore their religion: and yet for all this we cannot prevail with them to favour us with the ſight of one miracle, in order to our conviction; but if they have any, they keep them private among themſelves, though both reaſon and ſcripture tell us, that miracles were not intended for them that believe, but to convince them that believe not.

Fifthly, He from whom, of all perſons in that church, we might expect the moſt and greateſt miracles, does not, ſo far as I can learn, pretend at all to that gift; I mean, the head of their church, the Pope, who, both, as he is vicar of Chriſt, and ſucceſſor of St Peter in his full power and office, or if he be not his ſucceſſor, yet as he is his ſhadow, and pretends to be his ſucceſſor, might fairly pretend to a power of miracles above any in that church; and I have often wondered why he does not: but it ſeems he contents himſelf with infallibility, which is privilege and power enough for one man; and indeed if he had it, and could ſatisfy others that he hath it, that would ſerve his turn, without miracles: but the miſchief of it is, there is no other external evidence, and which can reaſonably ſatisfy others of any man's inſpiration or infallibility, but miracles;

and therefore the Pope hath done very unadviſedly, in pretending to one without the other, when he hath the ſame right and title to both, that is, none at all.

Sixthly, Moſt of the doctrines in difference between us and the church of Rome, which they chiefly pretend to confirm by theſe miracles, are not capable of being confirmed by them. There are three ſorts of doctrines, two of which are in their own nature incapable of being confirmed by a miracle, and a third upon ſuppoſition of its contrariety to the Chriſtian doctrine, which hath already had an unqueſtionable divine confirmation.

1. No doctrine which is contrary to ſenſe, is capable of being confirmed by a miracle as tranſubſtantiation; which becauſe it neceſſarily requires the renouncing of our ſenſes in order to the belief of it, for that very reaſon miracles can give no credit to it. For that which depends on the certainty of ſenſe, as miracles certainly do, can be no competent argument to prove that which is contrary to ſenſe, as tranſubſtantiation evidently is.

2. No doctrine that does countenance or injoin idolatry, is capable of being confirmed by a miracle. This is evident from Deut. xiii. where Moſes ſuppoſeth that a prophet might work a ſign or a wonder; but if it was to ſeduce them from the worſhip of the true God, who is naturally known, to the worſhip of idols, in that caſe they were not to hearken to him, notwithſtanding he wrought a miracle; but the church of Rome teacheth idolatry in their worſhip of images, and of the hoſt, and in the invocation of ſaints and angels.

3. No doctrine contrary to any part of the Chriſtian doctrine, which hath already received an unqueſtionable divine confirmation, is capable of being confirmed by the miracles pretended to in the church of Rome, if they were real. For I hope they have not the face to pretend their miracles to be equal to thoſe of our Saviour and his apoſtles, either for the certainty or greatneſs of them; and I have already ſhewn, that they notoriouſly want both the credit and certainty of our Saviour's miracles, and the marks of their divinity.

Now,

Now, ſeveral of the doctrines of that church are directly contrary to, or inconſiſtent with the doctrines of Chriſtianity. Their endeavour to conceal from people the doctrine of the goſpel, contained in the holy ſcriptures, is a notorious contradiction to the deſign of the goſpel, and to that particular miracle whereby the knowledge of it was conveyed to the world, the gift of tongues; and then the ſervice of God in an unknown tongue, which is inconſiſtent with true devotion, contrary to edification, and to the plain ſcope and deſign of a whole chapter of St Paul to the Corinthians. And ſo likewiſe is the communion in one kind, to our Saviour's expreſs inſtitution; and the repetition of Chriſt's ſacrifice, to as expreſs a declaration of the apoſtle to the Hebrews to the contrary, as is poſſible for words to make.

Seventhly and laſtly, which falls heavieſt upon them of all, the chief prophecies of the New Teſtament, which are concerning falſe prophets, and concerning Antichriſt, have marked him out by this character, that he ſhould be a great worker of miracles, and magnify himſelf upon this pretence. Math. xxiv. 24. For there ſhall ariſe falſe Chriſts, and falſe prophets, and ſhall ſhew great ſigns and wonders, inſomuch that, if it were poſſible, they ſhall deceive the very elect. And 2 Theſſ. ii. 9, 10. St Paul foretels there, that in the great degeneracy and falling away of the Chriſtian church, the man of ſin ſhould come after the working of Satan, with all power, and ſigns, and wonders of lies, that is, either falſe miracles, or miracles wrought to confirm falſe doctrines, and with all deceiveableneſs of unrighteouſneſs, all the legerdemain and juggling tricks of falſehood and impoſture. And certainly nothing was ever more viſible than theſe are in the church of Rome; whether we conſider their impudent forgeries of writings, which they have not the face now to deny, or the nature and character of their miracles. So that though Bellarmine is pleaſed to make miracles one of the marks of the true church, yet the miracles of the church of Rome, if we conſider all the circumſtances of them, are one of the plaineſt marks of Antichriſt, and the very brand of the beaſt, as we find him deſcribed, Rev. xiii. 13, 14. And he doth great wonders, and deceiveth them that dwell on the earth, by the means of thoſe miracles which he had power to do.

And now the church of Rome may be allowed to work miracles; and yet divine miracles, ſuch as were wrought for the firſt confirmation of Chriſtianity, may be ceaſed in the church; which is a ſufficient anſwer to the objection, and upon the whole matter ſhews, that the miracles pretended to in the church of Rome, are ſo far from giving any confirmation to her doctrines, that they are rather an evident proof that ſhe is the apoſtate and Antichriſtian church.

I might now draw two or three inferences from this whole diſcourſe. As,

I. We have great reaſon to admire the wiſdom and goodneſs of God in the diſpenſation of the goſpel, that by the ſending down of his Holy Spirit to endow the firſt publiſhers of this heavenly doctrine with ſuch miraculous gifts and powers, he hath given ſuch abundant teſtimony to the truth of our religion, and ſuch firm grounds for our faith to rely upon.

II. The conſideration of what has been ſaid, convinceth men of the great ſin of infidelity, and the unreaſonableneſs of it, after ſo clear conviction and demonſtration as God hath given to the world of the truth of Chriſtianity.

III. and laſtly, They who believe the goſpel, are utterly inexcuſable, if they do not obey it, and live according to it. For this is the great end of all the miracles which God hath wrought for the confirmation of Chriſtianity, that, by the belief of the goſpel, men might be brought to the obedience of faith, and live conformably to the precepts of that holy religion, which the Son of God by ſo many miracles hath planted and preſerved in the world. But theſe I have * diſcourſed of on another occaſion, and therefore ſhall inſiſt upon them no farther at this time.

SERMON CCXXXII.

1 JOHN iv. 4, 5.

Ye are of God, little children, and have overcome them: becauſe greater is he that is in you, than he that is in the world. They are of the world; therefore ſpeak they of the world, and the world heareth them.

The firſt ſermon on this text.

IN the beginning of this chapter, the Apoſtle cautions Chriſtians againſt the falſe teachers, and falſe prophets, intending more eſpecially thoſe of the Gnoſtick ſect, as is plain from the ſcope of the whole epiſtle, who were ſo buſy to ſeduce Chriſtians to their impious ways, and to tempt them to apoſtatize from the Chriſtian religion to the Heathen idolatry, for fear of perſecution.

And to encourage them who had hitherto continued in the truth, and reſiſted the ſeducing arts of thoſe falſe prophets, ſtill to perſevere in their holy profeſſion and practice, he tells them what advantages they who have embraced the truth and lived according to it, have above thoſe who ſeduce men to errors, or are ſeduced by them. Ye are of God, little children, and have overcome them: becauſe greater is he that is in you, than he that is in the world. That which gives truth, and the profeſſors of it, the advantage over error and ſeducers, is, that truth is from God, and the Spirit of God dwells in thoſe who ſincerely embrace and obey it.

Ye are of God; that is, ye are taught by him, and inſtructed in the doctrine which is from God, and reliſh divine truth, which our Saviour calls ſavouring the things which are of God, in oppoſition to the things of the world, the luſts and intereſts of the world, which ſway and rule in thoſe falſe prophets and ſeducing ſpirits. For ſo it follows in the next verſe, They are of the world; they are acted by worldly luſts and intereſts: therefore ſpeak they of the world; they teach things ſuitable to their worldly affections and intereſts; and the world heareth them, they who are of the ſame temper, are ſeduced and led away by them.

So that the Apoſtle's deſign in theſe words, is plainly to ſhew the great advantage which truth and the ſincere profeſſors of it have above error, and the teachers and diſciples of it.

Ye are of God. This phraſe is very frequently, and very peculiarly uſed by St John; it ſignifies to belong to God in a ſpecial and peculiar manner, and is the ſame with being born of God, and being the children of God, chap. iii. 10. In this the children of God are manifeſt, and the children of the devil: whoſoever doth not righteouſneſs, is not of God. Where you ſee, to be of God, and to be the children of God, are the ſame thing: and ſo to be the children of the devil, and to be of the devil, are by this apoſtle uſed in the ſame ſenſe, chap. iii. 8. He that committeth ſin, is of the devil. And ver. 12. Cain who was of that wicked one, that is, a child of the devil, as he had called ſuch before, ver. 10. And becauſe children do reſemble their parents in nature and diſpoſition, therefore thoſe who are of a divine temper and diſpoſition, who reliſh the things of God, and are apt to embrace the truths of God, when they are duly propounded to them, are ready to be taught of God, are ſaid likewiſe to be of God, John viii. 47. He that is of God, heareth God's words; ye therefore hear them not, becauſe ye are not of God. So here in the text, ye are of God; ye are of a temper and diſpoſition apt to reliſh divine things, ready to embracc the truths of God, and ye have entertained them, and are his children, and are led by his Spirit, and have the Spirit of God dwelling in you; and this makes you victorious. Ye have overcome them. He had ſpoken immediately before of falſe prophets and Antichriſt, by which he doth point out not one particular perſon, but the whole whole number and faction of falſe teachers, as he tells us, chap. ii. 18. that now there are many Antichriſts: Ye are of God, and have overcome them, this hath enabled you to reſiſt thoſe ſeducing ſpirits, and made you too hard for them, that ye are of God; becauſe greater is he that is in you, than he that is in the world. The force of the reaſoning is this, Ye are of God, that is, ye are taught of God, and have received his doctrine, and are born again by the word of God, and are his children, and being his children, ye have his Spirit; and the Spirit of truth and of God is a ſtronger principle than that ſpirit of error and ſeduction which is in the world, that is, the devil. Greater is he that is in you, than he that is in the world. The Spirit of truth is more powerful than the ſpirit of error and ſeduction; and conſequently they that are of God, who ſincerely embrace and obey the truth, are able to overcome all the temptations of the world to apoſtaſy from the truth.

My work, at this time, ſhall be to ſhew what advantage good men, and thoſe who ſincerely embrace and obey the truth, have to ſecure them in the ways of truth and holineſs, againſt all the temptations of the devil and the world. I ſay, in the ways of truth and holineſs, becauſe there is a ſtrict connexion between a hearty embracing of the truth of God, and a ſincere obedience to it. And the Apoſtle ſpeaks of both, in oppoſition to the Gnoſticks, who did not only endeavour to ſeduce men to apoſtaſy from the Chriſtian faith, but likewiſe from the practice of a holy life. Now, to ſecure men againſt temptations to both theſe, they who are of God, who ſincerely embrace and obey the truth, have a great advantage, becauſe that ſpirit and principle which rules and ſways in them, is more powerful than that ſpirit which rules in the world, and in the children of diſobedience. Greater is he that is in you, than he that is in the world; and that in theſe three reſpects:

Secondly, The motives to perſuade men to adhere to truth and holineſs are more operative and powerful.

Thirdly, There is a greater and more immediate aſſiſtance accompanies the truth of God, and they who

First, Divine truth carries greater evidence along with it; as will appear, if we consider these three things:

I. The doctrines that are from God have more intrinsick goodness in them, and teach such things as are more worthy of God, and more likely to proceed from him.

II. The external confirmation of these doctrines is greater, and hath more conviction in it.

III. The Spirit of God doth illuminate the minds of good men, and is concerned to lead them into the truth, and to secure them from dangerous and damnable errors.

I. The doctrines which are from God have a more intrinsical goodness in them, and teach such things as are more worthy of God, and more likely to proceed from him. Whoever supposeth God to make a revelation of himself to men, whereby to conduct them to happiness, must, in all reason, suppose such a divine doctrine to contain plain rules and directions to that end, and powerful helps, motives, and encouragements to enable and excite men to the observation of those rules. For a man would naturally reason, that God who is so infinitely good, would, in revealing his will to men, aim at no other end but the happiness of his creatures: and that he being infinitely wise as well as good, the means would be proportionable, and consequently that the laws and precepts which he gives would apparently tend to the happiness of mankind: and because if men have immortal souls, and are designed to live for ever, their greatest happiness is that of another world; therefore it is reasonable to conclude, that those rules and directions should principally regard the eternal happiness of men in another life, and in subserviency to that, should respect likewise the temporal happiness of men in this world.

And such laws and rules being supposed, the next thing to be expected is, that God should consider the condition and circumstances of persons to whom these laws are given; and if they be averse to them, that they should be awakened and quickened to the observance of them, by such motives and encouragements as

are proper and powerful to that end; and if they be weak and impotent to the performance of what God's laws require, that they ſhould be enabled and aſſiſted by a proportionable ſtrength.

Now, the doctrine of the Chriſtian religion, which our bleſſed Saviour revealed to the world, and, as we Chriſtians ſay, by divine commiſſion and authority, hath all theſe marks and characters of divinity upon it. The laws of it are plain and obvious to the common underſtanding of mankind; all men know what the precepts of piety, and goodneſs, and mercy, and righteouſneſs, and integrity, and truth, and faithfulneſs, of meekneſs, and humility, and patience, and forgiveneſs, and forbearance, and charity, mean; and ſo I might inſtance in temperance and chaſtity, and all thoſe other virtues and graces which the Chriſtian religion requires of us, and recommends to us. Theſe all tend to the advancement and perfection of our natures, and make us like to God, and capable of the enjoyment of him in the next life; and beſides this, they do apparently conduce in all reſpects to our temporal happineſs in this world. And excepting the caſe of perſecution, (to which God hath promiſed abundant recompence in another world), the practice of theſe virtues is evidently to the advantage of particular perſons in this world, and to the peace and happineſs of human ſociety.

And becauſe of the great corruption of human nature, and the ſtrong inclination of it to vice, the goſpel offers proportionable arguments and encouragements to men to perſuade them to their duty; an act of oblivion and pardon for what is paſt; perfect reconciliation to God in and through the merits and mediation of our bleſſed Saviour; and the eternal rewards and puniſhments of another world; which to men that believe the immortality of their ſouls, and are not ſtupidly inſenſible of their intereſt, are the moſt powerful conſiderations in the world to take men off from ſin, and to bring them to goodneſs.

And becauſe the corruption of human nature hath brought a great weakneſs and impotency upon mankind, God is pleaſed in the goſpel to offer to men the powerful ful assistance of his grace and Holy Spirit, to enable them to perform all this which he requires of them. And beyond this, what can we expect God should discover to men, in order to their happiness in this world, or the other? And in all these respects the doctrine of the gospel, revealed from heaven by the Son of God, hath, to any impartial considerer, infinitely the advantage of Paganism or Mahometism, or any other doctrine or institution that ever the world was acquainted withal.

But now, if we bring the doctrines of false prophets and seducing spirits, whom St John calls Antichrists, to this trial, we shall find that they are quite of another stamp, destitute of goodness, and calculated, not for the happiness and benefit of men, but for base and unworthy ends; whereby it is evident that the teachers of them are not of God, but of the world; and therefore they speak from the world, and the world heareth them. And of this I will give two instances; one in those false teachers the Gnosticks, intended by the apostle in this epistle; and the other in a sort of seducers nearer to us inour own times.

As for the Gnosticks, besides their contradicting and virtual renouncing the main principles of Christianity, by denying that Christ was really come in the flesh, or that he really died, or rose, affirming all this to be only in appearance; the sum of their doctrine was either a heap of unintelligible words and phrases, under a pretence of high mystery; or a doctrine of liberty, as to all manner of vice and wickedness, under a pretence of perfection, and that whatever they did, they could not sin; both which at the first sight are as plain evidence as any reasonable man can desire, that such a doctrine could not be from God; nothing being more unlikely to be a divine revelation, than such absurd and confused stuff as no man can understand, and which have no tendency to make men better. But above all, nothing can be more unworthy of God, nor more unlikely to proceed from him, than such a doctrine as gives encouragement to vice and wickedness of life, under what pretence soever it be. For what can be more contrary to God, and a greater affront to the reason of mankind,

The other inſtance I intend is nearer at hand, and concerns us more, and that is in the church of Rome, and thoſe falſe teachers which ſhe ſends abroad into the world, and which at this day ſwarm among us; and never did any character more unluckily agree to any ſort of men, than this of the Apoſtle does to that church and the teachers of it, that they are of the world, and therefore they ſpeak of the world, and the world heareth them.

In which words there are three remarkable characters given of falſe prophets and teachers.

1. That they are acted by a worldly ſpirit, and carry on a ſecular intereſt and deſign; they are of the world.

2. That they teach things ſuitable to their worldly intereſt and deſign, and therefore they ſpeak ἐκ τοῦ κόσμου, from the world, according to that worldly ſpirit that acts them and rules in them.

3. Thoſe that hearken to them are a ſort of people like themſelves, of worldly affections and intereſts; the world heareth them.

1. They are acted by a worldly ſpirit, and carry on a ſecular intereſt and deſign of greatneſs and ambition, of dominion and tyranny, of riches and wealth. Any man that conſiders the church of Rome at this day, and by what ſteps and degrees, by what worldly ways and unworthy means ſhe hath attained to that power, and wealth, and greatneſs, to that dominion and tyranny, which now for ſeveral hundred of years ſhe hath exerciſed, not only over the conſciences of men in the moſt cruel manner, but even over temporal princes and ſtates, in commanding their treaſures and armies, in depoſing kings, and diſpoſing of their kingdoms, and in all imaginable inſtances of ſecular dominion aud tyranny, cannot but be ſatisfied by what ſpirit they are acted, and that they as viſibly carry on a worldly intereſt and deſign, as the moſt ambitious ſecular prince ever did.

2. They teach things ſuitable to their worldly deſigns and intereſts. Let but any man impartially ſurvey thoſe which are the proper doctrines of the Romiſh church, and which we challenge for innovation and corruption of the truly ancient, catholick, and Chriſtian doctrine, and it will, at firſt ſight, be evident to him, whither theſe doctrines tend, and that they do not ſerve the ends of religion, but of worldly greatneſs and dominion. What greater inſtance of ambition, than the claim of the univerſal ſupremacy of the Biſhop of Rome over all Chriſtians and churches in the world, without the leaſt ground, or indeed colour of ground, either from ſcripture or antiquity; and not only of an univerſal ſpiritual power over Chriſtians, but of an indirect temporal power over princes, in order to ſpiritual ends, which may be extended to any thing, and hath been upon occaſion, to the donation of kingdoms, and the depoſing of princes, and the transferring of temporal dominion from lawful and hereditary princes, to thoſe who had no manner of right or title? What more arrogant, and directly tending to the enſlaving of mankind, than their pretence to infallibility, which yet they could never agree among themſelves where to place? What greater tyranny can be exerciſed over mankind, than to oblige them to an implicit faith, and blind obedience to believe what the church believes, though they do not know what it is; and to do what the church commands, though they doubt never ſo much of the lawfulneſs of it? than to hide the word of God from them, and to lock it up in an unknown tongue, and to deter them from the free uſe of that which was deſigned by God to be the great inſtrument of the ſalvation of mankind? than not to let men exerciſe their underſtandings in the ſervice of God; nor when they join in publick prayers, to ſuffer them to know what it is they aſk of God; as if the prieſts lips were ſo to preſerve knowledge, as to keep it all to themſelves, and not to make uſe of it for the benefit and edification of the people? And, laſtly, to impoſe upon men, under pain of damnation, the belief of doctrines not only contrary to the true ſenſe of ſcripture, but to all the ſenſe and reaſon of mankind, as is the doctrine of tranſubſtantiation? How is it poſſible to bring people into a greater ſubjection to the prieſts, and dependence upon them, than by auricular confeſſion, and that unreaſonable doctrine of making the efficacy of the ſacraments to depend upon the intention of the prieſt; and conſequently to put it into the power of a malicious and bad man to damn all his pariſh? And to mention but one thing more, what better contrivance could be thought of to enrich the church, and drain the purſes of the people, than their doctrines of purgatory, and prayers for the dead, of indulgences and ſatisfaction, and their farm of ſins and vices of all kinds, called the tax of the apoſtolick chamber? Can any man think that theſe and ſuch like doctrines are of God, which do ſo directly ſerve the ends of covetouſneſs and ambition? Any one that does not wilfully ſhut his eyes, may plainly ſee that ſuch doctrines and ſuch teachers are of the world, and that they ſpeak and teach theſe things out of a worldly intereſt and deſign.

And here I might take notice likewiſe, that they ſpeak from the world alſo in another ſenſe, by ſhewing what worldly and indirect means, not to ſay wicked and ſinful arts, they commonly make uſe of to make diſciples, and gain proſelytes, by flattery and falſehood, by concealing and miſrepreſenting their own doctrines and practices, by defaming their adverſaries with known fictions and calumnies, tempting men from their religion by promiſes of temporal advantages, which, when they have gained them, they do not always perform and make good. Can any thing be more oppoſite to the genius of true religion, than to promote it by means ſo plainly contrary to the very nature and deſign of it?

3. Thoſe who hearken to them, and are ſeduced by them, are generally like themſelves; they ſpeak from the world, and the world heareth them. Not but that men of very honeſt and ſincere minds may be ſeduced into great errors, through prejudice or weakneſs, or a melancholy ſuperſtition: but generally ſuch a religion as is calculated for the promoting of ſecular intereſt, and is carried on by ſecular arts, does gain upon carnal and worldly minds; and it is uſually ſome worldly conſideration or other that prevails with men to embrace and profeſs it. A religion, that can find out ways to ſave men without ſincere repentance and a good life, is very fit to make proſelytes in the world; they that teach ſuch doctrines

And thus I have done with the firſt thing, whereby it appears, that divine truth carries great evidence along with it, namely, that the doctrines which are from God have more intrinſical goodneſs in them, and teach ſuch things as are more worthy of God, and more likely to proceed from him. I will be briefer in the reſt.

II. The external confirmation of divine doctrines is greater, and carries more conviction along with it. By external confirmation, I mean chiefly that of miracles. And though the Pagan religion pretended to ſome, and our Saviour plainly foretold, that Antichriſts and falſe prophets ſhould ariſe, and ſhould ſhew ſigns and wonders; and St Paul hath told us, that the man of ſin ſhould come with ſigns, and wonders, and mighty power; yet none of theſe are of any great conſideration, in compariſon of the many, and great, and unqueſtionable miracles, which were ſo univerſally wrought for the eſtabliſhment of the Chriſtian religion, and continued for ſome ages; for they bear no manner of proportion to them, neither for the nature, nor number, nor circumſtances of them, ſo as to ſhake or weaken any man's belief of the Chriſtian religion, which had ſo much a greater confirmation given to it; eſpecially when our Saviour did foretel that falſe prophets ſhould do ſome things of this kind. For after a religion is eſtabliſhed by plain and unqueſtionable miracles, ſuch as, for their number, nature, publickneſs, and continuance, and all imaginable circumſtances of advantage, were never, upon any occaſion, wrought in the world; I ſay, after this, it is not reaſonable, that one or two ſingle miracles or wonders pretended to, or really wrought by a falſe prophet, ſhould bring in queſtion the truth of a religion confirmed by a long ſeries of the greateſt and moſt unqueſtionable miracles.

Beſides, that the doctrine of it is ſuch as is worthy of God, and moſt likely to proceed from him *.

As for the miracles pretended to by the church of Rome, they are generally ſo fantaſtical and ridiculous,

and ſo unlike the works of God, and wrought ſo to no end and purpoſe, not among unbelievers, for their conviction, which was always the great end of miracles, but among themſelves, and ſo deſtitute of credit, that the wiſeſt among themſelves are ſo far from believing them, that they are heartily aſhamed of them; ſo that we need not trouble ourſelves about them, for they are not like to give any great confirmation to any doctrine, which ſtands in ſo much need of confirmation themſelves.

III. Beſides the goodneſs of the doctrines which are from God, and the external confirmation of them by miracles, which is a great advantage to the reception of them, the Spirit of God doth likewiſe illuminate good men, and thoſe who are deſirous to know the truth, and hath promiſed to lead them into it, and to aſſiſt them in diſcerning between truth and falſehood. So our Saviour hath aſſured us, John vii. 17. If any man will do his will, he ſhall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God, or whether I ſpeak of myſelf. Beſides, that the doctrines which are from God do commonly carry the marks and characters of their own divinity upon them, the providence of God is likewiſe particularly concerned, that good men, and thoſe who are of honeſt minds, and ſincerely deſirous to know the truth, ſhould not be deceived in matters of ſo great conſequence to the happineſs and ſalvation of mankind. To the ſame purpoſe is that promiſe, John xiv. 21. He that hath my commandments, and keepeth them, he it is that loveth me: and he that loveth me, ſhall be loved of my Father, and I will love him, and will manifeſt myſelf to him. God is always ready to reveal his will to thoſe who are ſincerely deſirous to do it, and will not ſuffer men of honeſt minds to err dangerouſly in matters wherein their eternal ſalvation is concerned.

Thus you ſee what advantage the Spirit of truth hath above the ſpirit of error and ſeduction; that divine truth carries greater evidence along with it, both in reſpect of the goodneſs of the doctrines which are from God, and the great confirmation that is given to them, and the extraordinary illumination of God's Spirit, which is wont to accompany the truths of God to the minds of good men, who are ready and diſpoſed to give entertainment to divine truth.

I ſhould now have proceeded to the ſecond advantage which the Spirit of truth hath above the ſpirit of ſeduction, namely, that the motives to perſuade men to adhere to truth and holineſs, are more powerful and operative upon the minds of men, than the motives to the contrary.

And then, thirdly, that thoſe who embrace and obey the truth of God, have a greater aſſiſtance, and are acted by a more powerful ſpirit and principle, than any is in the world. And this ſeems to be more eſpecially the meaning of that in the text, Ye are of God, little children, and have overcome them: becauſe greater is he that is in you, than he that is in the world. But theſe I ſhall not now enter upon.

SERMON CCXXXIII.

The advantages of truth, in oppoſition to error.

1 John iv. 4, 5.

Ye are of God, little children, and have overcome them: becauſe greater is he that is in you, than he that is in the world. They are of the world: therefore ſpeak they of the world, and the world heareth them.

The ſecond ſermon on this text.

I Proceed to the ſecond advantage which the Spirit of truth hath above the ſpirit of error and ſeduction, namely, that the motives which good men have to perſuade them to adhere to truth and holineſs, are more powerful than the motives to the contrary. They who embraced the Chriſtian religion did firmly believe the eternal rewards and puniſhments of another world; and

and this principle of faith, being fixed and rooted in them, made them victorious over all the temptations of the world, over all the allurements and terrors of it; becauſe they were fully perſuaded of the happineſs and miſery of another world; the happineſs of thoſe who continued ſtedfaſt in the faith and obedience of the goſpel, and the dreadful miſery and puniſhment of thoſe who diſobeyed the goſpel of Chriſt, or apoſtatized from the profeſſion of it. Hence it was that they were not to be moved by any temporal conſiderations, either of eaſe or advantage, or of trouble and perſecution in this world. Their eternal intereſt lay ſo near their hearts, and they were ſo fully poſſeſſed with the belief of the everlaſting rewards and puniſhments of another life, that they overlooked the goods and evils of this life; and all temporal conſiderations put into the ſcales againſt their everlaſting intereſt, were of no weight and moment with them.

And this our apoſtle very particularly inſiſts upon in this epiſtle, chap. v. 4, 5. Whatſoever is born of God, overcometh the world; the children of God are victorious over the temptations of the world; and then he tells us what it is that makes them ſo; and this is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith. Who is he that overcometh the world, but he that believeth that Jeſus is the Son of God? The believing that Jeſus is the Son of God, infers the belief of his doctrine, and, conſequently, of that eminent part of it, the eternal recompence of another world, which, whoſoever firmly believes, will be able to reſiſt and overcome all the temptations of this world. For by the belief of the Chriſtian religion, and faith in the Son of God, we are fully aſſured of the reality and certainty of the mighty rewards and puniſhments of another world, though they be future and at a diſtance; and a firm perſuaſion of theſe things makes them in ſome ſort preſent to us as to their efficacy and operation: for to a wiſe and conſiderate man, a great good, or a great evil, which he believes will certainly befal him, according as he manageth his affairs well or ill, though it be at ſome diſtance, is of greater force than a far leſſer good or evil, which is preſent and nearer at hand. And of this we ſee many inſtances in the temporal concerns of men. A prudent man will forego his preſent eaſe and pleaſure, and part with a preſent advantage, lay down ready money, upon the certain proſpect of a far greater benefit that will come to him ſome years hence; and will undergo preſent pain and trouble, to prevent a far greater miſchief and inconvenience; and upon this principle, of the belief of future good and evil, all the great affairs of the world are managed. Upon this principle, men plow and ſow, and venture their eſtates in traffick to foreign parts, and truſt out their preſent ſtock, and purchaſe reverſions, and take phyſick, and cut off a limb, and run all thoſe hazards of eſtate and life, which we ſee men every day do; and all this for the ſecuring of ſome great advantage, or the preventing of ſome great miſchief, which though it be future and at a diſtance, yet they probably, or certainly, foreſee will happen to them.

And this principle is ſo much the ſtronger, and of greater force and efficacy, in matters of greater moment and importance, where the good hoped for, or the evil feared, is infinitely great, and concerns us for ever. If we firmly believe the reality and certainty of it, no temporal advantage or affliction can come in competition with them, in the calculation and account of a wiſe man; becauſe there is no proportion between finite and infinite, between the goods and evils which are temporal, and thoſe which are eternal; though the one be ſeen, and the other not ſeen; though the one be preſent and near to us, and the other future, and at a great diſtance.

Upon this principle the firſt Chriſtians continued firm and ſtedfaſt in the belief and obedience of the goſpel, and were bold and open in the profeſſion of it, notwithſtanding all the cruel aſſaults of perſecution, though they hazarded the loſs of all that was dear to them in this world, and expoſed themſelves to the ſuffering of whatever is grievous and terrible to fleſh and blood. They gloried in tribulation; and did not only patiently ſubmit to the greateſt ſufferings, but heartily praiſed God, who accounted them worthy to ſuffer for his name: they took joyfully the ſpoiling of their goods, knowing that in heaven they had a better and more enduring ſubſtance:

they were tortured, not accepting deliverance, that they might obtain a better resurrection; and when they were harassed with all the evils and calamities of human life, yet they fainted not, knowing that their light affliction, which was but for a moment, would work for them a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory; having their minds fixed, not upon the things which are seen, but the things which are not seen; the things which are seen being but temporal, but the things which are not seen being eternal.

Thus they overcame the world, not by the force and power of this world, but by the belief of another world, and of the mighty rewards and punishments of it. And this faith purified their hearts, and reformed their lives, and made them stedfast and unmoveable in their holy profession, and raised their minds above all the temptations and terrors of present and sensible things.

Let us now see, on the contrary, what kind of motives and arguments false teachers use to seduce men to their pernicious ways. They speak from the world, and commonly make use of base, and low, and temporal considerations, of little tricks and devices, and all deceivableness of unrighteousness, as the scripture calls it, to make disciples and gain proselytes. They terrify them with temporal dangers and inconveniencies, and represent to them suffering, and persecution, and death, in all their frightful shapes, to deter them from profession of the true religion: they set before them all manner of worldly baits and allurements, ease, and wealth, and preferment; they promise them liberty from the strictness of those laws and rules which religion ties them up to. By these arts and arguments the Gnosticks of old used to tempt men from Christianity, and to shake their constancy in the profession of it; and the same ways are still put in practice by seducers at this day: they tell men of a glorious church, that hath great power and interest in the world; they amuse them with a great deal of outward pomp and ceremony; they promise them preferment and great worldly advantages, by coming over to them; they threaten them with fire and faggot, with persecutions and massacres, and where they have power, they hold them fast when they have gained them, by the terror of an inquiſition; they promiſe them liberty, and what by the looſeneſs of their caſuiſtical divinity, and by the eaſineſs of their penances and abſolutions, and the cheats of their indulgences, they have deviſed ways to reconcile almoſt the worſt life that any man can lead, with fair hopes of getting to heaven at laſt. They tell them, indeed, they muſt make ſome ſtop in purgatory: but they have ſo many ways to releaſe men from thoſe ſufferings, as do very much abate the terror of them, to any man that hath but credulity enough to believe them: for beſides the vaſt treaſure of merits in the common bank of the church, which the Pope hath in his diſpoſal, and which no body ought to doubt but that they are faithfully employed by him for the eaſe and deliverance of ſouls in purgatory; I ſay, beſides theſe, there are ſo many particular ways of effecting this buſineſs, that a man of ordinary diſcretion, with an indifferent purſe, may ſo order the matter, that he ſhall only paſs through purgatory, but need not make any ſtay in that place of torments.

But though theſe be their common motives and inducements to draw men to their communion, yet they do not wholly omit the arguments taken from the eternal happineſs and miſery of men in another world: for to give them their due, there are no people in the world more prodigal of eternal ſalvation and damnation: they promiſe the one upon the eaſieſt terms, and threaten the other upon the leaſt diſpleaſure: if a man be in their communion, he can hardly fail of ſalvation; and if he be out of it, and differ from them in the leaſt point of faith, though but of their own making, he is ſure to be damned, though he had the graces and virtues, the ſanctity and charity of an angel: and this is the true reaſon why theſe arguments, which are ſo powerful in themſelves, ſignify ſo little from their mouths; becauſe every man that hath read the Bible, and underſtands the Chriſtian religion, plainly ſees, that they have made terms of ſalvation and damnation quite different from thoſe which God hath conſtituted: ſo that theſe motives, which are ſo ſtrong and mighty in themſelves, quite loſe their edge and force, when they are managed by ſeducers in ſo undue a manner, and to ends and purpoſes ſo croſs to the main deſign of Chriſtianity. This is the ſecond advantage which the Spirit of truth hath above the ſpirit of error and ſeduction, that the motives to perſuade men to adhere to truth and holineſs, are really, in themſelves more powerful than the motives to error and ſeduction.

Thirdly, Thoſe who ſincerely embrace and obey the truth of God, have a greater aſſiſtance, and are acted by a more powerful ſpirit and principle, than that which is in the world; and this ſeems more eſpecially to be the meaning of the reaſon here given in the text, why the Spirit of truth is victorious over the ſpirit of error and ſeduction: Ye are of God, little children, and have overcome them: becauſe greater is he that is in you than he that is in the world; that is, the Spirit which is in good men is more powerful than the devil, that evil ſpirit which inſpires and acts the children of diſobedience.

I. Shew that there are theſe two principles in the world, the Spirit of God, and the devil, very active and powerful in good and bad men.

II. That the Spirit of God, which is in good men, is greater than he that is in the world.

III. In what ways the Spirit of God doth move and aſſiſt good men.

I. That there are theſe two principles in the world, the Spirit of God, and the devil, very active and powerful, the one in good, the other in bad men. This is very credible in the general, from the univerſal tradition and conſent of mankind, in the belief of good and evil ſpirits attending men, and prompting them to good and evil: but we, who embrace the revelation of the goſpel, have a much firmer and ſurer ground for it, nothing being more plain and frequent in ſcripture, than that the Holy Spirit of God guides and aſſiſts good men in doing the will of God; and that the devil works in the children of diſobedience, and is always ready to tempt men to and promote, any evil action or deſign. From hence it is, that the ſcripture does almoſt every where aſcribe all good motions and actions to the operation and influence of God's grace and Holy Spirit upon the minds of men; and the ſins of men to the temptation and ſuggeſtion of the devil; and this is ſo well known to any one converſant in the holy ſcriptures, that I need not cite particular texts for the proof of it.

It is true indeed, that the motions of God's Holy Spirit, and the ſuggeſtions of the devil, are very ſecret to us, and imperceptible by us, ſo that no man can ſay certainly, that this good inclination or action is an immediate motion of God's Holy Spirit in me, or that evil thought and deſign is an immediate ſuggeſtion of the devil; it is ſufficient for us, that we are aſſured from divine revelation in general, that the Spirit of God very frequently does, and is always ready to aſſiſt good men in the doing or ſuffering of God's will; as the evil ſpirit, where God permits him, is always buſy to tempt and ſeduce men to evil. And this ought not to be ſtrange to us, becauſe our Saviour hath expreſly told us, that the Spirit of God works in men after an imperceptible manner: John iii. 8. The wind bloweth where it liſteth, and thou heareſt the ſound thereof, but canſt not tell whence it cometh, and whither it goeth: ſo is every one that is born of the Spirit. Though we do not know the manner of the Spirit's working, nor perceive the operations of it upon our minds, yet we find the effects of it in the renovation and ſanctification of our hearts. Thus, by undeniable arguments, men are aſſured of a divine providence governing the world, though men do not always ſee, nor can make out to others, the particular interpoſitions of it, ſo as to ſay, that this or that was an immediate effect of divine providence. To know certainly that a thing is, it is not neceſſary that we ſhould be able to give a particular account of all its operations, and the manner of them; theſe may be hidden from us, and yet we may be ſufficiently aſſured, by other arguments, that there is ſuch a thing. Men are ſure they have ſouls, though they can give no account how the actions of underſtanding, and remembrance, and ſenſation are produced by them: ſo it is in the preſent caſe, we are ſufficiently aſſured from the word of God, that good and bad ſpirits have a great influence upon the minds of men, though we be not conſcious to their operations, and the manner of them.

II. The Spirit of God which is in good men, is greater than he that is in the world; he is more able and ready to aſſiſt men to good purpoſes, than the devil is to tempt and help forward that which is evil. And this will appear, if we conſider theſe three things.

1. The Spirit of God is more powerful than the devil; and this is ſo evident in itſelf, that it needs no proof.

2. The Spirit of God is as forward and willing to aſſiſt men to good purpoſes, as the devil is to the contrary. That extremity of malice and envy, which is in evil ſpirits, does, no doubt, make them very forward and active to do all the miſchief they can to mankind, by tempting and ſeducing them to ſin: but, on the other hand, the utmoſt perfection of goodneſs, which in God is more and greater than the malice of the devil, will incline more ſtrongly the Holy Spirit of God to pity, and aid, and help good men, than the malice of the devil can urge him to procure the harm and miſchief of mankind; and if we could ſuppoſe their will and inclinations equal, yet our comfort is, their power is not.

3. The Spirit of God hath a more free and immediate acceſs to the minds of good men, and a more intimate conjunction with, and operation upon them, than the devil. The Spirit of God is always preſent to us, and willing to dwell and abide in us, and ready to help and aſſiſt us, if we be ready to obey his dictates, and comply with his holy and bleſſed motions; if we did not reſiſt and quench, and grieve him, he would always take up his abode and habitation in us, and would be continually exciting, and guiding, and aſſiſting us to that which is good; he knows our hearts, and ſees all the ſecrets of our ſouls; knows all our inclinations, knows our weakneſs and our danger, what aſſiſtance we want, and when it will be moſt ſeaſonable; and is as intimate to us, and as conſcious to all the motions of our ſpirits, as we ourſelves are.

But now the devil is under great reſtraint, and cannot make nearer approaches to any man than God permits him; he does not know our hearts, nor can pry into the ſecret of our thoughts. God knows, but the devil does but gueſs at the thoughts, and deſigns, and inclinations of men; he hath no power over us, nor any acceſs to us, but what we give him, or God permits. By obedience to God's will, and reſiſting the temptations of the devil to ſin and diſobedience, we may not only keep out the devil, but keep him at a great diſtance, and make him flee from us, ſo that we ſhall have little trouble or moleſtation from him: for though he be unwearied in his malicious attempts to ruin our ſouls, yet, becauſe he cannot be every where, he haunts thoſe moſt where he hath greateſt hopes of ſucceſs; and is too eager and intent upon miſchief to employ his time and temptations where he hath been often foiled, and hath reaſon to deſpair of victory. So that, if all things be conſidered, it is our own fault if we want the aſſiſtance of God's Holy Spirit, or if the devil have any great power over us; for God does not uſually, but upon great provocation, take away his Holy Spirit from men, and lay them open to the aſſaults and temptations of the devil. If any be led captive by the devil at his pleaſure, it is thoſe who have wilfully forſaken God, and ſold themſelves to do wickedly.

III. We will conſider in what ways the Spirit of God doth move and aſſiſt good men. Theſe two ways.

1. By exciting good motions in us, and enabling us to bring them to effect.

2. By ſupporting us under perſecution for religion.

1. By exciting good motions in us, and enabling us to bring them to effect. Theſe the Apoſtle puts together, Phil. ii. 13. For it is God that worketh in you both to will and to do, of his good pleaſure. It is he that ſtirs up good inclinations in us, and carries them into effect. And this he makes an argument why we ſhould be diligent and induſtrious in the work of our ſalvation, becauſe God is ſo ready to aſſiſt us: Work out your own ſalvation with fear and trembling: for it is God that worketh in you both to will and to do, of his good pleaſure.

2. By ſupporting us under perſecution for religion. In caſe of extraordinary temptations, and violent aſſaults upon our conſtancy in religion, by fierce and cruel perſecutions, God affords immediate and extraordinary ſupports to good men, whereby they are many times borne borne up under the greatest sufferings, not only with patience, but with comfort, and joy unspeakable and full of glory. Wherever God suffers good men to be tempted above humanity, he affords them an immediate divine assistance, to bear them up, and make them victorious. So St Peter tells us, 1 Peter iv. 4. that those who suffer and are reproached for the name of Christ, the Spirit of glory and of God resteth upon them. So likewise St Paul, 1 Cor. x. 13. speaking of those who had not yet been set upon by any sharp persecution, No temptation hath taken you, but such as is common to man, εἰ μὴ ἀνθρώπινος, nothing but what is human, what the spirit of a man may bear: but if such a case happen, of temptation above nature, and the spirit of a man be too weak to support itself under it, God will, in that case, afford men immediate and extraordinary supports and comforts: God is faithful, who will not suffer you to be tempted above what you are able; but will with the temptation also make a way to escape, that you may be able to bear it; and then it immediately follows, Wherefore, my dearly beloved, flee from idolatry; because God hath promised such an extraordinary assistance, in case of persecution for religion, therefore, he encourageth them to continue stedfast in the profession of Christianity, and cautions them ugainst apostasy to the Heathen idolatry.

The inference from all this discourse is, to encourage us to continue stedfast in the truth, and in the practice of our holy religion, to hold fast the profession of our faith without wavering, and not to suffer ourselves to be shaken with every wind of doctrine, by the arts and cunning of those who lie in wait to deceive; who creep into houses, and lead captive silly women, laden with sins, and led away by divers lusts. You see what kind of persons these false teachers used to proselyte; women of no virtue, of a prostituted reputation, laden with sins, and led away with divers lusts; a character that notoriously agrees to some seducers of our times.

Therefore, let us continue in the things which we have heard, and not suffer ourselves to be moved from our stedfastness. The more we consider our religion, and compare it with the unquestionable revelation of God in the holy ſcriptures, the greater reaſon we ſhall ſee to adhere to it. The doctrines of our religion are of God, plainly contained in his word, and ſuch as are worthy of him, and likely to proceed from him, and tend to the good and happineſs of mankind, to make men really better, and to qualify them for that happineſs which God hath promiſed to holy ſouls. The doctrines of our religion are free from the ſuſpicions of a worldly intereſt and deſign. But if we conſider the doctrines and innovations of that church which pretends to be the only Chriſtian catholick ſociety in the world, we ſhall find, that they are of another ſtamp, and of a quite contrary tendency, that they ſavour ſo rankly of a worldly intereſt, that any impartial man would, at firſt ſight, judge them to be the contrivances of worldly, covetous, and ambitious men, and that they did not look like divine truths, and doctrines that are of God, but that they are of the world, and, therefore, they that propagate them, and would ſeduce men to them, ſpeak from the world, and the world heareth them.

SERMON CCXXXIV.

2 Cor. iv. 3, 4.

But if our goſpel be hid, it is hid to them that are loſt: in whom the god of this world hath blinded the minds of them which believe not, leſt the light of the glorious goſpel of Chriſt, who is the image of God, ſhould ſhine unto them.

The firſt ſermon on this text.

I Shall explain theſe words, and then ptoceed to handle many things contained in them.

If our goſpel be hid, or veiled; for, by this metaphor, the Apoſtle alludes to what he had ſaid in the latter part of the foregoing chapter, concerning the veil which was upon Moſes's face, and upon the hearts of the Jews, ſo that they could not ſee to the end of that diſpenſation. There was a great deal of obſcurity in that adminiſtration: But the veil is done away in Chriſt. The goſpel is a clear revelation, and ſufficiently conſpicuous in itſelf: and now, if it be hid from any, the fault is not in the obſcurity of the object, but in the blindneſs of mens minds.

If our goſpel be hid, it is hid to them that are loſt; to them that deſerve to periſh, becauſe they will not ſee.

In whom the God of this world hath blinded the minds of them that believe not. Some of the fathers, as St Auguſtine, and St Chryſoſtom, and ſeveral of the Greek ſcholiaſts, read theſe words otherwiſe: In whom God hath blinded the eyes of the men of this world who believe not; and ſo refer this blindneſs to God's permiſſion; in which ſenſe he is ſaid elſewhere in ſcripture, to harden mens hearts. The reaſon why they chuſe this reading of the words, rather than the other, was in oppoſition to the Marchionites and Manichees; the former of which ſects made uſe of this text to countenance their opinion of two Gods; the one of the Old Teſtament, whom they called the juſt God; the other of the New, whom they ſtyled the good God; the former of theſe, ſay they, made the world, and is therefore here called the God of this world. The Manichees made uſe of this text to prove that the devil, whom they made the principle of all evil and imperfection, was the maker of this world, and is therefore called the god of it.

But there is no need why, for this reaſon, we ſhould depart from the uſual reading of the words; for there is nothing in the true importance of them, that can give countenance to theſe errors. For the devil, though he did not make this world, may be ſaid to be the god of it, upon a very good account, becauſe the greateſt part of the world being ſunk into idolatry and wickedneſs, were become his lot and portion, who worſhipped him as God, and did his works, and, therefore, were part of his dominion. So St John tells us, 1 John iii. 8. He that committeth ſin, is of the devil; and, chap. v. 19. We know know that we are of God, and the whole world lies in wickedneſs, ἐν τῷ πονηρῷ κεῖται, which may be rendered more agreeably to the oppoſition which the Apoſtle intended, is ſubject to the evil one, is in his power, and under his dominion. According to which Plutarch tells us, that " every unreaſonable and brutiſh nature belongs to " the lot of bad ſpirits." So that, in this ſenſe, the devil may very well be ſaid to be the god of this world, as he is elſewhere called by our Saviour the prince of this world, John xii. 31. Now ſhall the prince of this world be caſt out ; and John xiv. 30. The prince of this world cometh. And ſo the Apoſtle, Eph. vi. 12. The ruler of the darkneſs of this world.

Leſt the light of the glorious goſpel of Chriſt, who is the image of God, ſhould ſhine unto them, εἰς τὸ μὴ αὐγάσαι, leſt they ſhould ſee, or behold the light of the glorious goſpel ; for ſo Heſych tells us, that αὐγάζω αὐγάζομαι, is ὁράω καὶ βλέπω. It is called the glorious goſpel of Chriſt becauſe of the glorious confirmation that was given to it by his miraculous reſurrection and aſcenſion, and his ſending the Holy Ghoſt into the world ; and Chriſt is ſaid to be the image of God, becauſe the power of the Deity did ſhew forth itſelf in the miracles which he wrought.

The words being thus explained, the moſt material things that offer themſelves to our conſideration in them, are theſe three :

Firſt, The full and clear evidence which we have of the truth of the goſpel, or of the Chriſtian religion, which the Apoſtle expreſſeth to us in theſe words, the light of the glorious goſpel of Chriſt.

Secondly, The cauſe of infidelity, notwithſtanding all the evidence which the goſpel carries along with it, which the Apoſtle expreſſeth in theſe words, in whom the god of this world hath blinded the eyes of them that believe not.

Thirdly, The dangerous ſtate of thoſe, who, having the goſpel propounded to them, do not believe it. The Apoſtle tells them, they are loſt and undone : If our goſpel be hid, it is hid to them that periſh.

I begin with the firſt of theſe, namely, the full and clear evidence which we have of the truth of the goſpel, or Chriſtian religion. The only thing that can give us full aſſurance that any religion is true, is, if we can be ſatisfied, that it is from God; for, being once ſatisfied of that, there can remain no doubt of the truth of any thing that comes from him, it being an eſſential part of the notion which every man hath of God, that he is a God of truth.

Now, there are two things muſt concur to give the mind of man full ſatisfaction that any religion is from God.

Firſt, If the perſon that declares this religion give teſtimony of his divine authority, that is, that he is ſent and commiſſioned by God to that purpoſe. And,

Secondly, If the religion which he declares contain nothing in it that is plainly repugnant to the nature of God. I ſay, theſe two muſt concur; for, though I could ſuppoſe a perſon to bring the higheſt teſtimony imaginable of his divine miſſion and authority, ſuppoſe he ſhould work a miracle for the confirmation of his doctrine; yet, if there were any thing in the doctrine plainly repugnant to the natural notions which I have of God, I could not receive it as from God; the reaſon of which is plainly this, I can have no aſſurance that that is from God, which, if it were true, I ſhould be uncertain whether there were a God or not. I cannot poſſibly have any greater aſſurance that any thing is from God, than I have that there is a God; and I have no greater aſſurance that there is a God, than I have of his eſſential perfections, as that he is good, and powerful, and wiſe, and juſt, &c. For, by the very ſame arguments that I come to know that there is a God, I know likewiſe that he muſt neceſſarily have theſe perfections. So that, if any thing ſhould be offered to me as a revelation from God, which plainly contradicts thoſe natural notions which I have of him, I muſt neceſſarily reject it, yea though it were backed with a miracle; becauſe no man can at the ſame time believe that there is a God, of ſuch and ſuch perfections, and entertain any thing as from him, which evidently contradicts thoſe perfections. And as this is reaſonable in itſelf, ſo it is clear from ſcripture, Deut. xiii. 1, 2, 3. If there ariſe among you a prophet, or a dreamer of dreams, and giveth the a ſign, or a wonder: and the ſign or the wonder come to paſs, whereof he ſpake unto thee, ſaying, Let us go after gods, which thou haſt not known, and let us ſerve them: thou ſhalt not hearken unto the words of that prophet. Here is the very caſe put which I am ſpeaking of; a prophet comes and preacheth the worſhip of idols, as the ſun, moon, ſtars, &c. and, for the confirmation of this, he is ſuppoſed to work a miracle; and yet, notwithſtanding this, we are forbid to hearken to him, becauſe the doctrine that he brings does evidently contradict the natural notions which I have of God.

From all which it appears, that theſe two things muſt concur, to give us full ſatisfaction that any religion is from God, namely, firſt, that the perſon that declares this religion, gives teſtimony of his divine authority, that he is ſent and commiſſioned from God to that purpoſe. And,

Secondly, That the religion which he declares contains nothing in it that is plainly repugnant to the nature of God.

Now, to bring this to my preſent purpoſe, I ſhould ſhew theſe two things concerning the Chriſtian religion:

Firſt, As to the divine authority of the perſon that declares this religion to the world; that he was ſent and commiſſioned by God to that purpoſe.

Secondly, As to the religion itſelf, that there is nothing in it that is repugnant to the nature of God.

I intend chiefly to ſpeak of the firſt of theſe: for I dare ſay, any one that will freely and without prejudice conſider the Chriſtian religion, as it is laid down in the ſcriptures, and not as it hath been abuſed by the wanton wits of ſome, and the deſigns of others, will find nothing in it but what is very ſuitable to the nature of God, and worthy of him; he ſhall find nothing in the propoſitions of faith, but what is ſuitable to the perfections of the divine nature, and hath a proper influence upon a godly practice; nothing in the precepts of life, but what plainly tends to the perfection of human nature, and the advantage and happineſs of mankind; nothing in the arguments and motives to obedience, as, namely, the love of Chriſt in dying for us, the aſſiſtance of God's Holy Spirit, and the rewards and puniſhments of another world, but what is very accommodate to our nature, and ſuitable to the wiſdom, and goodneſs, and juſtice of God; and theſe three, the propoſitions of faith, the precepts of life, the arguments and motives to obedience, do conſtitute the Chriſtian religion, and make up the whole goſpel. Concerning moſt of theſe, I have elſewhere treated at large; therefore, I ſhall now apply myſelf chiefly to the firſt thing, namely, to ſhew that we have abundant ſatisfaction of the divine authority of the perſon that declares this religion to the world.

Now, becauſe we live at a great diſtance from the age wherein this revelation of the goſpel by Jeſus Chriſt was made to the world, it will be requiſite, for our clearer proceeding in this matter, to conſider diſtinctly theſe three things:

Firſt, What evidence thoſe who heard this doctrine of the goſpel immediately from our Savour had for his divine authority. And this enquiry only reſpects the diſciples of our Saviour, and the reſt of the Jews to whom he preached.

Secondly, What evidence thoſe had who received this doctrine by the preaching of the Apoſtles. And this concerns thoſe to whom the goſpel was publiſhed by the Apoſtles, after our Saviour's death.

Thirdly, What evidence after-ages, until the preſent time, have of this. And this properly concerns us, who live at a great diſtance from the times of the firſt publication of the goſpel.

And, according to theſe three differences of time, there are likewiſe but three ways whereby we can come to the knowledge of matter of fact; and they are all ſuch as are capable of giving us ſufficient aſſurance.

The firſt is by the teſtimony of our own ſenſes; and this was the advantage of thoſe who heard our Saviour's doctrine, and ſaw his miracles.

The ſecond by the report and relation of credible eye and ear witneſſes; and this advantage thoſe had who heard the Apoſtles.

The third by a conſtant and uncontrolled relation, derived down ſucceſſively from one age to another, either by word, or writing, or both; which is the way whereby the ages, ſince the Apoſtles to this day, have had the Chriſtian religion derived down to them.

Firſt,

First, To consider what evidence those who heard this doctrine of the gospel immediately from our Saviour himself might have of his divine authority. Now, there are but four ways that I can at present imagine, setting aside an internal revelation in every man's mind, whereby men may be sufficiently satisfied of the divine authority of any person.

I. If it be prophesied of him, and foretold by persons divinely inspired, that God would send such an one as his messenger and prophet into the world, and afterwards such a person comes, to whom all the circumstances of those prophecies do agree.

II. By the testimony of an immediate voice from heaven.

III. By a power of working miracles.

IV. By the gift of prophecy, proved and made good by the accomplishment of his own predictions.

Now, I shall shew, that those who lived in our Saviour's time, and conversed with him, were capable of satisfaction concerning his divine authority all those four ways. I shall begin with the

I. They were capable of being eye-witnesses that Christ was the great Prophet and Messenger of God, the Messias prophesied of and foretold in the Old Testament. And here I do reasonably take for granted the divine authority of the Old Testament, and that the prophecies therein contained are of divine inspiration; because those to whom our Saviour ordinarily preached, were only the Jews, who acknowledged the divine authority of those books; and, therefore, the accomplishment of those prophecies in the person of our Saviour, must needs be a satisfactory argument to them, that he was the Messias foretold.

Now, to shew that the disciples of our Saviour, and the rest of the Jews, were capable of receiving full satisfaction in this, that Jesus Christ was the Messias prophesied of in the Old Testament, I shall proceed by these steps:

1. That the prophecies of the Old Testament fix a time for the coming of the Messias; they give certain marks and signs whereby it may be known when the Messias would come; as that he should come when the government should utterly be lost from Judah. Gen. xlix. 10.

The

The ſceptre ſhall not depart from Judah, till Shiloh come; by whom the ancient Jews did underſtand the Meſſias; and nothing but plain malice againſt Chriſt, and the Chriſtian religion, makes the modern Jews to depart herein from the ſenſe of their ancient maſters. That he ſhould come before the deſtruction of the ſecond temple, Hag. ii. 6, 7, 8, 9. For thus ſaith the Lord of hoſts, Yet once, it is a little while, and I will ſhake the heavens, and the earth, and the ſea, and the dry land. And I will ſhake all nations, and the deſire of all nations ſhall come, and I will fill this houſe with glory, ſaith the Lord of hoſts. The ſilver is mine, and the gold is mine, ſaith the Lord of hoſts. The glory of this latter houſe ſhall be greater than of the former, ſaith the Lord of hoſts: and in this place will I give peace, ſaith the Lord of hoſts. From whence it is plain, that this houſe ſhould remain when the deſire of all nations, that is, the Meſſias, according to the interpretation of the ancient Jews, ſhould come, and his preſence ſhould be the glory of this ſecond temple, and make it excel the firſt. And much to the ſame purpoſe, Mal. iii. 1. Behold, I will ſend my meſſenger, and he ſhall prepare the way before me; and the Lord, whom ye ſeek, that is, the Meſſias, ſhall ſuddenly come to his temple, even the meſſenger of the covenant, whom ye delight in: behold, he ſhall come, ſaith the Lord of hoſts. That he ſhould come at the end of ſo many weeks of years, from the going forth of the commandment to reſtore and build Jeruſalem, and after ſo many weeks of years ſhould be cut off, and after that the city of Jeruſalem and ſanctuary ſhould be deſtroyed and made deſolate, Dan. ix. 24, 25, 26, 27. So that you ſee the prophecies of the Old Teſtament do fix and aſcertain the time of the Meſſias's coming, both by infallible marks and ſigns, concomitant and conſequent, and by an exact computation of years.

2. That the time fixed by thoſe prophecies for the coming of the Meſſias is already paſt. And this appears, in that all thoſe marks and ſigns, which it was foretold ſhould accompany and follow the coming of the Meſſias, are come to paſs, and the time limited for the coming of the Meſſias is long ſince expired.

For

For (1.) the ſceptre is long ſince departed from Judah. The Jews are now diſperſed among all nations, their government loſt, their families confounded, in ſo much that they do not at this day know thoſe of the tribe of Judah from others. At the captivity, the government was not utterly loſt, for they had a prince of the captivity; or, at leaſt, it was interrupted but for ſeventy years, and then it was reſtored to them again: but now the ſceptre hath been departed and the government loſt for ſixteen hundred years.

(2.) The ſecond temple is deſtroyed, to which it was foretold, that the deſire of all nations ſhould come.

(3.) The city is deſtroyed and made deſolate, which was foretold ſhould be after the cutting off of the Meſſias.

(4.) The ſeventy weeks of years are accompliſhed and expired long ſince, which were to begin from the going forth of the commandment to reſtore and build Jeruſalem, and to end at the coming of the Meſſias the Prince. And whether we fix the beginning of theſe weeks in the firſt or ſecond year of Cyrus, or in the reign of one of the Darius's or Artaxerxes's, (for by univerſal conſent it muſt begin in ſome of them), it matters not to my preſent purpoſe; for wherever it be fixed, theſe weeks are long ſince expired.

3. And, conſequently, the Meſſias is already come. For if the predictions of the Old Teſtament be true, which limit his coming to a certain time, which is fixed both by infallible marks, and by an account of years, I ſay, if theſe predictions be true, that he ſhould come at ſuch a time, and that time is paſt, then he is already come.

The Jews ſeek to evade the force of this argument by this pitiful ſhift, that the promiſes and predictions of the Meſſias were not abſolute, but conditional: that is, he ſhould come at ſuch a time, if the ſins and impenitency of men did not hinder. To this I anſwer,

(2.) The reaſon that they give why God hath deferred the accompliſhment of thoſe prophecies and promiſes, is, becauſe of the impenitency and wickedneſs of the people of the Jews at that time; which will agree very well with the hiſtory of the goſpel, and give us a very good account

how they came to reject the Meſſias; becauſe they were ſo wicked, and their unbelief and impenitency were ſo great at that time.

(3.) There is no ſuch condition any where expreſſed in any of thoſe prophecies.

(4.) It is unreaſonable that there ſhould be ſuch a condition; that the impenitency of men ſhould hinder the coming of him, who was to bring the world to repentance, that is, to do that on his part which was ſufficient to that end.

(5.) Nothing could bring the veracity of God into queſtion more, than to make ſuch predictions conditional, as by the concurrent teſtimony of ſo many prophets have the time of their accompliſhment ſo punctually defined, and have not either a condition expreſly fixed to them, or, in the nature of the thing, neceſſarily implied: and if this were not ſo, any one might pretend to be a true prophet, though the event proved never ſo contrary to his prediction.

(6.) It appears, out of the books of the Jews, to have been a conſtant tradition among them, that the Meſſias ſhould come when the ſtate of the people was moſt degenerate, and there was the greateſt corruption and diſſolution of manners among them. And if this be ſo, then their wickedneſs and impenitency could be no obſtacle and impediment to the fulfilling of the promiſes and predictions concerning the Meſſias.

I ſhould have added, in the next place, that the prophecies and promiſes in the Old Teſtament concerning the Meſſias, do all exactly, both as to the time, and all other circumſtances, agree to Jeſus Chriſt, who was born at Bethlehem, who gave himſelf out to be the Meſſias, and whom we Chriſtians own to be ſo. But this I reſerve for the next opportunity.

SERMON CCXXXV.

2 COR. iv. 3, 4.

But if our goſpel be hid, it is hid to them that are loſt: in whom the god of this world hath blinded the minds of them which believe not, leſt the light of the glorious goſpel of Chriſt, who is the image of God, ſhould ſhine unto them.

The ſecond ſermon on this text.

IN diſcourſing on theſe words, I have begun to ſhew, how thoſe who heard the doctrine of the goſpel immediately from our Saviour, might be ſatisfied concerning his divine authority; and I mentioned four ways by which ſuch perſons might receive full ſatisfaction.

I. By the agreement of the prophecies and promiſes of the Old Teſtament to our Saviour.

II. By the teſtimony of an immediate voice from heaven.

III. By the power of working miracles.

IV. By the gift of prophecy, proved and made good by the accompliſhment of his own predictions.

In diſcourſing of the firſt of theſe, I proceeded by theſe ſteps.

1. That the prophecies of the Old Teſtament did fix a time for the coming of the Meſſias, and gave certain marks and ſigns whereby it might be known when the Meſſias would come.

2. That the time fixed by thoſe prophecies for the coming of the Meſſias is already paſt.

3. And

3. And conſequently, that the Meſſias is already come. Thus far I have gone; and now add,

4. The prophecies and promiſes of the Old Teſtament concerning the Meſſias do all exactly, both as to the time and all other circumſtances, agree to Jeſus Chriſt, that was born at Bethlehem, who gave himſelf out to be the Meſſias, and whom we Chriſtians own to be ſo.

1. The time ſpecified in thoſe predictions agree to him. When he came into the world, the government was departed from Judah; for they were then in ſubjection to the Romans; and Herod their King, who was put into the government by the Romans, was an Idumæan. He came into the ſecond temple, which, notwithſtanding its being re-edified by Herod, might juſtly be accounted the ſame, it not having been again deſtroyed by any enemy, but only pulled down, in order to the beautifying and enlarging of it, notwithſtanding which, Joſephus every where calls it the ſame temple; for he reckons but two temples, the one, that which Solomon built, which continued till the captivity of Babylon; the other, that which Zerubbabel built, and that, he ſays, continued till the Romans deſtroyed Jeruſalem. And not long after our Saviour's death, the city of Jeruſalem and the ſanctuary were utterly demoliſhed, and the end thereof was with a flood; there was a total devaſtation of them; which plainly ſhews the ſeventy weeks did alſo expire about that time, where-ever we fix the beginning of them; becauſe the prophecy of Daniel tells us plainly, that towards the expiration of them, the city and the ſanctuary were to be deſtroyed; which was fulfilled with a great deal of ſeverity, as if there were ſome extraordinary cauſe of thoſe fearful judgments which came upon them. And indeed we find, that after they had committed the great ſin of crucifying the Lord of life, they gave up themſelves to all manner of wickedneſs, filling up the meaſure of their ſins, that wrath might come upon them to the uttermoſt; inſomuch that Joſephus tells us, "That he did verily "believe, that if the Romans had not come at that "time to deſtroy them, either the earth would have "ſwallowed up their city, or a flood have overwhelm" ed, or thunder and lightning, or fire from heaven,

" would have consumed them, like Sodom and Gomor-
" rah, for, says he, this generation was much more
" wicked than they were."

And, which is a very considerable argument to the Jews, he came at the time when their whole nation were in expectation of the Messias; and indeed the whole world were about this time in expectation of a Prince out of Judea. That the Jews did expect the Messias about this time, appears by the famous saying of one of their greatest rabbies, Elias, that there should be 2000 years before the law, 2000 years the law should last, and 2000 years should be the time of the Messias: and according to the most exact chronology, it was much about the 4000th year of the world that Christ was born. That a great part of the world besides were at this time in expectation of a Prince to spring out of Judea, appears from these known testimonies of Suetonius and Tacitus. Percrebuerat toto oriente vetus et constans opinio, esse in fatis, ut Judæâ profecti rerum potirentur, saith Suetonius; and Tacitus to the same purpose. Both agree in the words of this prophecy, which seem to be taken out of the prophecy of Micah, speaking of Bethlehem in the land of Judea; Out of thee shall come a Governor. And Suetonius tells us farther, that the belief and expectation of this among the Jews was so great at that time, that this was the cause of their rebelling against the Romans. A just judgment of God upon them, that those who had rejected the true Messias should be deluded to their own ruin by the hopes of a false one.

2. All other circumstances of those promises and prophecies are exactly answered in the history and relation which the gospel gives of him. He was emphatically the seed of the woman, according to the first and very obscure promise made to our first parents, Gen. iii. 15. The seed of the woman shall bruise the serpent's head: I say, he was emphatically the seed of the woman, being, as our books of the gospel tell us, born of a pure virgin, which never knew man. He was the seed of Abraham, according to the second promise of him made to Abraham, Gen. 12. 3. In thee shall all the families of the earth earth be bleſſed. He was a prophet like unto Moſes, being a great worker of miracles above any of the prophets, as Moſes alſo was; and by whom God gave a new law, as he did by Moſes, according to the other famous promiſe of him, Deut. xviii. 15. A prophet ſhall the Lord your God raiſe up unto you, like unto me.

He was of the tribe of Judah, and of the ſeed of David, as it was foretold the Meſſias ſhould be; therefore he is called in the goſpel, the ſon of David; and the apoſtle to the Hebrews, chap. vii. 14. appeals to the Jews concerning this, as a thing clear and acknowledged among them, It is evident that our Lord ſprang out of Judah; which he would not have affirmed to the Jews without proof, if it had not been granted by them.

For the other, that he was of the ſeed of David, the Jews will by no means admit as a thing at all evident from the hiſtory of the goſpel concerning him: for, ſay they, if that appear any where, we ſhould find it in his genealogy; but there we find no ſuch matter: there indeed we have the genealogy of Joſeph very differently related by the two evangeliſts, Matthew and Luke; but what is this to the genealogy of Chriſt, when the Chriſtians themſelves avowedly declare, that Joſeph was not his father? It is granted that Joſeph was of David's line; but to prove that Chriſt was really deſcended from David, inſtead of the genealogy of Joſeph, they ſhould have ſhewn Mary's.

This is a very malicious and ſpiteful objection, and the Jews inſiſt very much upon it: but yet I think it is capable of a very ſatisfactory anſwer, in which I ſhall proceed by theſe ſteps:

1. We will grant that both the genealogies of our Saviour, that in Matthew and that in Luke, are intended to ſhew that Joſeph was of Abraham and David's line, and that neither of them have the genealogy of Mary. Some indeed have thought ſo, but it ſeems to me with very little probability: I incline much rather to Grotius's excellent conjecture about it, that Matthew's genealogy gives us an account of the ſucceſſion of the royal family down as low as Joſeph, and that in St Luke the direct ſeries of Joſeph's anceſtors.

2. The Jews grant that it hath been an ancient tradition among Chriſtians, that Joſeph and Mary were of the ſame family, and that Mary was virgo ἐπίκληρος, one that had no brethren, an heireſs, or co-heireſs, and ſo, according to the Jewiſh cuſtom, ſhe was bound to marry in her family; which the Jews were eſpecially careful of in the family of David, to preſerve the ſucceſſion of the royal line, of which the Meſſias was to come.

3. The Jews have nothing to object againſt this which ſhews it improbable.

4. If ſo, that they were of the ſame family, then the genealogy of Joſeph, though not directly and expreſly, yet by conſequence, was the genealogy of Mary; and conſequently thoſe genealogies in the goſpel do ſufficiently ſhew that Chriſt was the Son of David.

5. It cannot be imagined that the evangeliſts ſhould have omitted the genealogy of Mary, if it had not been included in that of Joſeph, eſpecially St Matthew, who in his genealogy expreſly tells us, that he intended to ſhew that he was the Son of David, and alſo denies Joſeph to have been his real father.

6. If there had been any queſtion, whether Mary was of the line of David, the Jews would certainly in that time have rejected him from being the Meſſias, upon that very account, nothing being more plauſible for them to have ſaid than this, that he pretended to have no father, and to be born of a virgin, who was not of the line of David, how could he then be the Meſſias, who was to be of the ſeed of David? But that he was always owned by the Jews to be of that ſeed, appears by the title ſo frequently given to him, of the Son of David.

It was propheſied that the Meſſias ſhould be born in Bethlehem of Judah, Micah v. 2. which you find accordingly fulfilled, Matth. ii. 6. the providence of God ſo ordering it, that Auguſtus ſhould then lay a general tax, which occaſion brought up Joſeph and Mary to Bethlehem; not only that ſhe might be delivered there, but that their names being there entered, their family might be aſcertained, and there might no doubt afterward ariſe, but that they were of the line of David.

It was foretold he ſhould be born of a virgin, Iſ. vii. 14. which you ſee accordingly fulfilled, Matth. i. That this is not the primary, but the myſtical ſenſe of that place in Iſaiah, I think may without prejudice be granted to the Jews, who, in innumerable places of the Old Teſtament do, beſides the firſt and literal ſenſe, allow of a myſtical one; and if it be objected that this is only the ſaying of us Chriſtians, that Chriſt was born of a pure virgin; to them it is eaſily anſwered, that if this be foretold of the Meſſias, whoever he be, that he ſhall be born of a virgin, as the Jews generally grant, we have as much aſſurance of this, as they can have, or imagine to have of theirs, whenever he ſhould come. For it is not any report or tradition that can give credit to ſo ſtrange a thing, but the unqueſtionable miracles which he wrought, which prove him to come from God, and conſequently to be no impoſtor, but to be all that he pretended he was.

It was foretold of him, that he ſhould be a great prophet and teacher, Deut. xviii. 15. A prophet ſhall the Lord your God raiſe up unto you, like unto me. Iſ. lxi. 1. The Spirit of the Lord is upon me, becauſe he hath anointed me to preach the goſpel to the poor, &c. Ezek. xxxiv. 23. And I will ſet up one ſhepherd over them, and he ſhall feed them, even my ſervant David; he ſhall feed them, and he ſhall be their ſhepherd. And chap. xxxvii. ver. 24. And David my ſervant ſhall be King over them, and they all ſhall have one ſhepherd: they ſhall alſo walk in my judgments, and obſerve my ſtatutes, and do them. And this was eminently fulfilled in that he foretold ſeveral future contingents; as his own crucifixion, Peter's denial of him, the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, the raiſing of falſe Chriſts, and falſe prophets, (which I ſhall particularly conſider hereafter) the deſcending of the Holy Ghoſt, and the admirable ſucceſs of the goſpel in the world; in that he preached ſo pure and perfect a doctrine to the world, and with ſo much authority; a doctrine ſo excellent and reaſonable, ſo ſuitable to the neceſſities, and agreeable to the reaſon of mankind; a doctrine which tendeth ſo much to the perfecting of human nature, and to the peace and happineſs of human ſociety, above any other inſtitution in the world.

It was foretold that he ſhould do many and great miracles, and ſuch as ſhould be beneficial to men, Iſ. xxxv. 5, 6. Then the eyes of the blind ſhall be opened, and the ears of the deaf ſhall be unſtopped. Then ſhall the lame man leap as an hart, and the tongue of the dumb ſing. And was not all this eminently accompliſhed in Jeſus Chriſt? What greater, or more publick, or more frequent and numerous, or more beneficial miracles, can almoſt be imagined, than Chriſt did? So that we may ſay to the Jews, as ſome of them did to the Phariſees in our Saviour's time, You talk of a Meſſias to come; yet when he is come, will he do greater works than this man hath done?

It was foretold of him, that the people ſhould receive him with joy and triumph when he came riding upon an aſs to Jeruſalem, Zech. ix. 9. which we find fulfilled, Matth. xxi.

It was propheſied that he ſhould ſuffer many things and be rejected, and deſpiſed of men. Pſal. xxii. 6. But I am a worm, and no man; a reproach of men, and deſpiſed of the people. Iſ. liii. 3. He is deſpiſed and rejected of men, a man of ſorrows, and acquainted with grief: and we hid, as it were, our faces from him; he was deſpiſed, and we eſteemed him not. Which we find fulfilled all along in the hiſtory of the goſpel.

It was propheſied that he ſhould be ſold for thirty pieces of ſilver, Zech. xi. 12. which we find fulfilled, Matth. xxvii. 9. That when he who was the ſhepherd was ſmitten, the ſheep ſhould be ſcattered, Zech. xiii. 7. which was accompliſhed, Matth. xxvii. 56. All the diſciples forſook him and fled. That he ſhould be ſcourged, and buffeted, and ſpit upon. Iſ. l. 6. I gave my back to the ſmiters, and my cheeks to them that plucked off the hair: I hid not my face from ſhame and ſpitting; which you find punctually accompliſhed, Matth. xxvii.

It was foretold, that he ſhould die a violent death, Iſ. liii. 8. He was cut off out of the land of the living. Dan. ix. 26. Meſſias the Prince ſhall be cut off. That he ſhould undergo all theſe ſufferings with the greateſt patience, Iſ. liii. 7. He was oppreſſed, and he was afflicted, yet he opened not his mouth: he was brought as a lamb to the ſlaughter; and as a ſheep before her ſhearers is dumb, so he opened not his mouth. That he should suffer all these things, not for himself, but for sinners, Is. liii. 5. He was wounded for our transgressions, he was bruised for our iniquities; the chastisement of our peace was upon him, and with his stripes we are healed. And ver. 6. The Lord hath laid on him the iniquity of us all. And ver. 8. For the transgression of my people was he stricken. And ver. 10. His soul was made an offering for sin. And ver. 12. He bare the sins of many. And Dan. ix. 26. it is said, the Messias should be cut off, but not for himself.

It was foretold, that his hands and feet should be pierced, Psal. xxii. 16. he should be numbered with the transgressors, Is. liii. 12. And accordingly he was condemned as a malefactor, to suffer with malefactors, being crucified between two thieves.

It was foretold, that he should have gall and vinegar given him to drink, Psal. lxix. 22. that he should be derided in the midst of his sufferings, Psal. xxii. 7, 8. All they that see me, laugh me to scorn: they shoot out the lip, they shake the head, saying, He trusted in the Lord, that he would deliver him: let him deliver him, seeing he delighted in him. And this was most punctually accomplished, Matth. xxvii. 39, 43. And they that passed by, reviled him, wagging their heads, and saying, He trusted in God, let him deliver him now, if he will have him.

It was foretold that he should cry out under his sufferings, Psal. xxii. 1. My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me? why art thou so far from helping me, and from the words of my roaring? That he should pray for his wicked persecutors, Is. liii. 12. that he made intercession for the transgressors; and so he did most affectionately, Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do. That they should cast lots for his garments, Psal. xxii. 18. All, or most of which predictions were by the ancient Jews understood of the Messias, and were exactly fulfilled in Jesus Christ, as appears fully out of the history of the gospel.

And then for the circumstances of his burial; it was foretold, that he should make his grave with the rich,

Is,

Iſ. lii. 9. which was accompliſhed in that he was put into Joſeph of Arimathea's own tomb.

His reſurrection was foretold, to be after three days, Hoſ. vi. 24. as ſeveral of the rabbies underſtood that place; however, that he ſhould riſe again, may be plainly argued from thoſe texts, where it is ſaid, that his kingdom ſhall have no end; and Iſ. liii. 10. where it is ſaid, that after his death, he ſhall ſee his ſeed, and prolong his days; and that the pleaſure of the Lord ſhall proſper in his hand. But moſt expreſly, Pſal. xvi. 10. Thou wilt not leave my ſoul in hell, neither wilt thou ſuffer thine holy One to ſee corruption.

And his ſitting at the right hand of God, which ſuppoſeth his aſcenſion into heaven. Pſal. cx. 1. Sit thou at my right hand, until I make thine enemies thy footſtool.

The wonderful ſucceſs of the goſpel, and the univerſal ſpreading of it through the world, was foretold Gen. xii. 3. In thee ſhall all the nations of the earth be bleſſed; which implies, that the bleſſing of the goſpel, which the Meſſias brought to the world, ſhould be univerſally diffuſed, Gen. xlix. 10. To him ſhall the gathering of the people be. Pſal. ii. 8. God promiſeth there, to give Chriſt the Heathen for his inheritance, and the uttermoſt parts of the earth for his poſſeſſion. Beſides ſeveral other places of the pſalms and prophets, too many to be reckoned up.

Now, the accompliſhment of all theſe prophecies happened in their days who ſaw our Saviour, and converſed with him; ſo that they were capable of receiving full ſatisfaction concerning his divine authority, and that he was a perſon ſent of God to teach the world, and aſſure them that he was the Meſſias, foretold and propheſied of in the books of the Old Teſtament, which being by them received as of divine inſpiration, did conſequently aſſure them that he was from God.

II. The ſecond way whereby we may be ſatisfied concerning the divine authority of a perſon, is by the teſtimony of an immediate voice from heaven: and this teſtimony Chriſt had twice given to him: the firſt publickly before a great aſſembly of people at John's baptiſm, which was juſt before he began his publick miniſtry. Matth. iii. 16, 17. The Holy Ghoſt deſcended upon upon him like a dove, as he came out of the water; and there was a voice from heaven, which ſaid, This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleaſed. The ſame voice was heard by Peter, James, and John, at his transfiguration on the mount, as you may ſee, Luke ix. 35. And this St Peter mentions as a conſiderable argument of Chriſt's divine authority, 2 Pet. i. 16, 17, 18. For we have not followed cunningly deviſed fables, when we made known unto you the power and coming of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, but were eye-witneſſes of his majeſty. For he received from God the Father, honour and glory, when there came ſuch a voice to him from the excellent glory, This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleaſed. And this voice which came from heaven, we heard, when we were with him in the holy mount.

Indeed he makes this teſtimony to be ſuch an argument, as concurring with that which I mentioned before, is ſufficient to perſuade one that Chriſt was ſent from God; but he does not make it to be equal to that, which he adds at the 19th verſe, We have alſo a more ſure word of prophecy, whereunto ye do well that ye take heed, as unto a light that ſhineth in a dark place, intimating the prophecies of the Old Teſtament were greater confirmation than this ſingle teſtimony of a voice from heaven does amount to.

III. I proceed to the next evidence, which thoſe who lived in our Saviour's time had of his divine authority, viz. the power of working miracles, which he was endowed withal; and this is the higheſt teſtimony that can be given to any perſon that he is ſent from God. And in this reſpect chiefly is the goſpel called the light of the glorious goſpel of Chriſt, becauſe of thoſe glorious miracles whereby the goſpel was confirmed. This is, as it were, the broad ſeal of heaven which is ſufficient to give confirmation to any doctrine which does not evidently contradict the perfections of the divine nature: and it is not credible, that the providence of God is ſo little tender of the concernments of mankind, as to communicate this power to any perſon that will abuſe it to the confirmation of a lie. I deny not but the devil may do many ſtrange things, and ſuch as we cannot diſtinguiſh from ſome ſort of miracles *; and where men, by ſome great precedent provocation, have made it juſt for God to give them up to ſtrong deluſions to believe lies, becauſe they would not believe the truth, but had pleaſure in unrighteouſneſs; there God may permit the devil to work ſtrange wonders, as it is foretold, 2 Theſſ. ii. 9. that the coming of Antichriſt ſhall be after the working of Satan, with all power, and ſigns, and lying wonders, and all deceiveableneſs of unrighteouſneſs. But in this caſe there will remain two ways, whereby impartial and conſiderate men, and ſuch as are not blinded by prejudice or their luſts, may ſufficiently diſcover, that this is not from God.

1. By the abſurdity of the doctrine which thoſe wonders are brought to confirm: and ſuch were the lewd, and filthy, and ſenſeleſs doctrines of the Gnoſticks, to which Simon Magus pretended to give a confirmation by the wonders that he wrought, and this very probably may be that which the Apoſtle refers to in this chapter. And ſuch likewiſe are ſeveral of the doctrines of Popery: ſuch as the adoration of the virgin Mary, of ſaints and images, and the doctrine of tranſubſtantiation; for the confirmation of which, they pretend a great many wonders have been wrought.

2. By the contrariety of the doctrine to that which hath had the confirmation of far greater miracles. Therefore if we ſhould grant to the Papiſts, that ſeveral of thoſe miracles which they brag of, were really wrought, (which, conſidering the infinite cheats and impoſtures which have been practiſed by them in that kind, and have been diſcovered, we have no reaſon to grant); yet becauſe the doctrine, which they pretend to confirm, is abſurd, and unreaſonable, and contrary to the doctrine which they themſelves own to have had a far greater confirmation, by miracles far greater and more unqueſtionable, more publickly done, and in ſuch a manner, and with ſuch circumſtances, as do free them from all ſuſpicion of impoſture; I ſay, for this reaſon we cannot admit thoſe doctrines to be of divine authority; becauſe the confirmation which is given to them by thoſe wonders, is overpowered by a greater and more divine teſtimony; mony; as the magicians of Pharaoh, though they did many odd feats, yet were plainly maſtered and conquered by the greater miracles which Moſes wrought.

The ſum is this, that where-ever any perſon is endowed with an eminent power of working miracles, ſuch as are of the firſt rank, great and unqueſtionable, and many, and publickly wrought, that is one of the higheſt evidences we can have of the divine authority of any perſon or doctrine. Therefore Nicodemus does upon this ground very reaſonably conclude, that our Saviour was ſent from God, John iii. 2. We know that thou art a teacher come from God; for no man can do thoſe miracles which thou doſt, except God be with him. And our Saviour himſelf inſiſts upon this frequently as the great proof of his divine authority, Matth. xi. 3, 4. When John Baptiſt ſent two of his diſciples to him, to be ſatisfied, whether he was the Meſſias, he bids them report to John what the doctrine was which they heard him preach, and what miracles they ſaw him work for the confirmation of it: Go and ſhew John thoſe things which ye do ſee and hear; the blind receive their ſight, and the lame walk, and the lepers are cleanſed, and the deaf hear, and the dead are raiſed up, and the poor have the goſpel preached unto them. John v. 33, 36. our Saviour there tells the Jews, that John bare witneſs of him, and that might ſatisfy them, becauſe they looked upon John as a prophet: but, ſaith he, I have greater witneſs than that of John; for the works which the Father hath given me to finiſh, the ſame works that I do, bear witneſs of me, that the Father hath ſent me. John xv. 24. If I had not done among them the works which none other man did, they had not had ſin. This was the great aggravation of their unbelief, that they reſiſted the evidence of ſo great miracles, ſuch as no man in the world ever wrought *.

I ſhould now briefly run over the chief of thoſe miracles of our Saviour, which we find recorded in the hiſtory of the goſpel; and ſhew that they have all the advantages that miracles can have, to give ſatisfaction to men concerning their reality. But this I reſerve for my next diſcourſe.

SER-

SERMON CCXXXVI.

2 COR. iv. 3, 4.

But if our goſpel be hid, it is hid to them that are loſt: in whom the god of this world hath blinded the minds of them which believe not, leſt the light of the glorious goſpel of Chriſt, who is the image of God, ſhould ſhine unto them.

The third ſermon on this text.

IN my laſt diſcourſe, I was conſidering the third evidence which thoſe who lived in our Saviour's time had of his divine authority, viz. the power of working miracles, with which he was endowed. And in treating on this, I propoſed briefly to run over the chief of thoſe miracles of our Saviour, which we find recorded in the goſpel, and to ſhew that they have all the advantages that miracles can have, to give ſatisfaction to men concerning their reality. And that I may proceed in ſome kind of order and method, I ſhall reduce the miracles that concern our Saviour to theſe three heads:

Firſt, The miracles of his life.

Thirdly, The great miracle of his reſurrection from the dead, and thoſe two that were conſequent upon it, his aſcenſion into heaven, and his ſending the Holy Ghoſt upon the apoſtles and Chriſtians in miraculous gifts and powers.

I begin with the firſt; the miracles of his life. And in ſpeaking of theſe, I ſhall ſhew that they had all the advantageous circumſtances to convince men of the reality of them, and to free them from all ſuſpicion of impoſture.

poſture. They were many; they were great, and unqueſtionable miracles; they were frequently wrought, and for a long time together; publickly, and in the preſence of multitudes; and they were beneficial, and for the good of men.

1. They were many. There might be ſomething of impoſture ſuſpected in a few inſtances, that might be choſen out for the purpoſe. But our Saviour gave inſtances of his divine power in ſeveral kinds, ſo that there is ſcarce any thing that is miraculous can be inſtanced in, wherein he did not ſhew his power. He healed all manner of diſeaſes, and that in multitudes of people, as they came accidentally without any diſcrimination, Matth. iv. 23, 24. And though moſt of his miracles were healing, yet he gave inſtances in other kinds; as in turning of water into wine; commanding down the ſtorm; and walking upon the waters, &c. And though the hiſtory of the goſpel mentions very many miracles that he wrought, yet St John tells us, that thoſe that are recorded, are but very few in compariſon of what he did, John xx. 30. And many other ſigns truly did Jeſus in the preſence of his diſciples, which are not written in this book. And chap. xxi. 35. And there are alſo many other things which Jeſus did, the which if they ſhould be written every one, I ſuppoſe that even the world itſelf could not contain the books that ſhould be written. An hyperbolical expreſſion, to ſignify the great number of his miracles and actions, beſides what are recorded by the evangeliſts.

2. As they were many, ſo they were great and unqueſtionable, both as to the manner of doing them, and as to the things that he did.

(1.) Many things which were not miraculous in themſelves, yet were ſo as to the manner of doing them, which was not by any magical words, and figures, and charms, and ſuperſtitious rites, according to the manner of thoſe who pretended to work miracles among the Heathens. It is true, he healed many diſeaſes which were curable by phyſick and art; yet then the manner was ſuch as was above the ordinary courſe of nature; many he cured by a word only, or by a touch, and the cure was wrought immediately, and in the ſame inſtant when he ſpake the word, though they were at a great diſtance. Many were cured without his taking any notice of them, by touching the very hem of his garment; of all which I might give ſeveral inſtances, but that they are ſo well known to thoſe who are acquainted with the hiſtory of the goſpel. Sometimes, indeed, he performed the cure by degrees; as in the man that was reſtored to ſight, and ſaw men at firſt confuſedly, and without any diſtinction, as if they had been trees, Mark viii. 24. Sometimes he uſed ſome kind of means, but ſuch as were very diſproportionable in their nature to the effect that was produced; as in the caſe of the deaf man, which he cured by putting his finger into his ear, and by his ſpittle, Mark vii. 33; and the blind man whoſe eyes he anointed with clay mixed with ſpittle, and ſent him to waſh in the pool of Siloam, John ix. 6, 7. But moſt of his miracles he wrought in an inſtant, and merely by his word.

(2.) As to the things he did, many of them were miraculous in themſelves. He cured many inveterate diſeaſes, as Matth. ix. 20. A woman that had an iſſue of blood twelve years. He made the woman ſtraight by touching her, that had been crooked, and bowed together eighteen years, Luke xiii. 13. and the man that had an infirmity thirty-eght-years, only by bidding him take up his bed and walk, John v. 8. He cured the man that was born blind, John ix. and, which all men will grant to be miraculous, and to have exceeded all the power of nature that we know of, he raiſed ſeveral from the dead; and becauſe it might be ſaid that ſeveral of thoſe were not really dead, but in a delirium or ſwoon, there is one inſtance beyond all exception, John xi. he raiſed up Lazarus to life, after he had been four days in the grave.

(3.) He wrought his miracles frequently, upon all occaſions that were offered, and for a long time together, during the whole time of his publick miniſtry, which is generally computed to have been three years and a half; a time ſufficient to have detected any impoſture in; eſpecially one that ſhewed himſelf ſo openly, and converſed indifferently with all ſorts of perſons with ſo little guard and caution.

(4.) He

(4.) He did all his miracles publickly, not in corners and among ſome ſelect company of people, but before multitudes, and in the greateſt places of concourſe; ſo that if there had been any thing of impoſture in them, he gave the faireſt opportunity that could be to his enemies to have detected him. Mahomet's miracles were wrought by himſelf alone, without witneſs; which was the beſt way in the world certainly for one that could work no miracles, but yet could perſuade the people what he pleaſed; but our Saviour did nothing in private. His transfiguration only was before three of his diſciples; and therefore he made no uſe of that as an argument to the Jews, but charged his diſciples to tell it to none, till after his reſurrection, becauſe that would give credit to it; after they were aſſured of that, they would eaſily believe his transfiguration: but all his other miracles were in the ſight of the people. He healed publickly, and admitted all to ſee what he did. When he turned the water into wine, it was at a publick feaſt; when he multiplied the loaves, and the fiſhes, it was in the ſight of four or five thouſand people; when he raiſed Lazarus from the dead, it was before a great multitude of the people. The works that he did durſt abide the light, and the more they were manifeſted, the more miraculous they did appear.

(5.) His miracles were generally beneficial, and for the good of men; ſo that they had theſe two characters of divinity ſtamped upon them, that they were effects both of power and goodneſs. Moſt of his miracles were ſuch as tended to the benefit of mankind; moſt of them were either healing, or feeding miracles; or refreſhing, as turning the water into wine; or tending to the peace of human ſociety, as the miracle that he wrought, rather than he would give offence by not paying tribute. It is true, indeed, he might have ſhewn his power every way, he gave ſome inſtances of it in other kinds, which might ſeem more for his purpoſe, and for the manifeſtation of his power, as in his allaying the ſtorm, and walking upon the water: but he wrought no miracles that were deſtructive, except only two, namely, his permitting the devil to enter into the ſwine, Math. viii. 28. whereby the inhabitants of the place ſuſtained a great loſs. But our Saviour did this upon very good reaſon, as a reproof of that ſordid temper which he ſaw to be in them; they were ſo immerſed in the world, and wedded to their intereſts, that they would, rather than loſe any thing in that kind, forfeit all the bleſſings that the Meſſias brought with him; and this temper appeared afterward in them; for though they were convinced that he had wrought a miracle, yet becauſe they had ſuſtained ſome prejudice, they deſired him to depart out of their coaſts.

The other exception is his curſing the fig-tree, Matth. xxi. 19. which had a moral ſignification to his diſciples, and was a ſharp warning to them, what they muſt look for if they were unfruitful. Our Saviour rebukes our ſloth and barrenneſs in the fig-tree.

Secondly, Next to the miracles of our Saviour's life, I mentioned thoſe that were wrought at his death, which though they were not wrought by him, yet they were wrought to give teſtimony to him, that he was ſome extraordinary perſon; for as much as when he died, the frame of nature was put into ſuch a trembling and melancholy poſture. So the hiſtory of the goſpel tells us, Matth. xxvii. 45. that from the ſixth hour till the ninth, there was darkneſs over all the land; which, as learned men have calculated, could not be an eclipſe, according to the natural courſe of things. And ver. 51, 52, &c. The veil of the temple was rent from the top to the bottom, and the earth did quake, and the rocks rent, and the graves were opened.

Thirdly, The great miracle which was wrought after his death, in raiſing him up from the dead, together with thoſe two that were conſequent upon it; his viſible aſcending into heaven, and his ſending the Holy Ghoſt upon the Apoſtles and primitive Chriſtians, in ſuch miraculous gifts and powers.

Firſt, The great miracle of his reſurrection, after he had lain three days in the grave. This was the miracle which was to be the chief atteſtation of his divine authority, and to give confirmation to the doctrine which he declared to the world. And accordingly we find that the chief office of the apoſtles was to be witneſſes of his reſurrection; ſurrection; and the great evidence they were to give to the world of his divine authority was, that God raiſed him from the dead. And we find the ſcripture every where laying the great ſtreſs of his divine authority upon this miracle. Acts xvii. 31. By that man whom he hath ordained, whereof he hath given aſſurance unto all men, in that he hath raiſed him from the dead. Rom. i. 4. Declared mightily to be the Son of God, by his reſurrection from the dead. 1 Pet. i. 21. Who by him do believe in God, that raiſed him up from the dead, and gave him glory.

Now, that this miracle was really wrought, I ſhall endeavour to ſhew, by producing ſuch evidence for it, as the nature of the thing to be proved, which is matter of fact, will bear. I ſhall therefore,

Secondly, Add ſome conſiderations that may ſerve to give ſtrength and advantage to the teſtimony.

Firſt, For the teſtimony we have of this. In ſhort, we have it atteſted by an abundantly ſufficient number of eye-witneſſes; and greater evidence than this, matter of fact is not capable of. For the eye-witneſſes and the number of them, you have them produced by St Paul, 1 Cor. xv. 5, 6, 7, 8. The ſum of what he ſaith is this: That Chriſt, after his reſurrection, was ſeen once by Peter alone, once by James alone, and twice by all the Apoſtles together, and by above five hundred brethren at once. So that the number of the eye-witneſſes is abundantly ſufficient. And that they did atteſt this, appears by the hiſtory of the goſpel, which hath deſcended down to us by uncontrolled tradition. And in this caſe we require no more credit to be given to the goſpel, than to any other hiſtory, or narrative of matter of fact; which, whoſoever doth deny, takes away the faith of hiſtory, and makes it impoſſible to prove the truth of any thing that is paſt †.

Secondly, I ſhall add ſome conſiderations that may ſerve to give ſtrength and advantage to this teſtimony; partly relating to the perſons that give this teſtimony, and partly to the matter or thing which they atteſt.

1*ſt*, In

1*ſt*, In reference to the perſons that give this teſtimony, we may conſider them with theſe three advantages.

1. That they are credible perſons.

2. That they agree in their teſtimony.

3. That the greateſt ſufferings could not make them to conceal it or deny it.

1. For the credibility of the perſons. Two things render a witneſs ſuſpected, want of knowledge, or of integrity; if either he do not ſufficiently know the thing which he atteſts; or there be a reaſon to ſuſpect his fidelity in relating the thing. Now, the witneſſes in this caſe of the reſurrection cannot be queſtioned for either of theſe; not for want of knowledge, becauſe they were eye-witneſſes, as I ſaid before; nor for want of faithfulneſs. There are two things which ordinarily make us ſuſpect the fidelity of a witneſs; if there be either an appearance of deceit in the manner of the relation, or of deſign in the end of it: but the witneſſes of Chriſt's reſurrection are free from both theſe grounds of jealouſy.

(1.) There is no appearance of deceit in the manner of their relating it. We ſuſpect a relation that is either too general, or too artificial; but the report of theſe witneſſes cannot be charged with either of theſe. For,

1*ſt*, They report the thing with all its circumſtances of time and place, when he roſe, what were the circumſtances of it, where he was ſeen, and by whom, how often he appeared, what he did and ſaid.

2*dly*, They uſe no art or inſinuation in the manner of delivering, but report it with the greateſt plainneſs, and nakedneſs, and ſimplicity that can be imagined; without any ambiguity, or obſcurity, or flouriſh of language, as becomes an honeſt relator, who uſeth no arts, becauſe he is not guilty to himſelf of any deſign to deceive.

(2.) Nor is there any appearance of deſign as to the end of their teſtimony. What deſign could they have, who did knowingly renounce all ſecular advantages of honour, and riches, and reputation, and forego all worldly contentment, and expoſe themſelves to continual hazards and ſufferings? They got nothing by bearing this teſtimony, but what every man that hath worldly deſigns doth moſt ſolicitouſly avoid.

2. They concur and agree in their teſtimony. They conſtantly delivered the ſame teſtimony, with all its circumſtances, both in word and writing, ſeveral perſons in ſeveral places, without varying or diſagreeing in the leaſt material circumſtance.

3. The greateſt ſufferings could not make them either deny it, or conceal it; which is a great argument of their integrity. If the thing they atteſted had been falſe, it had been an unparallelled madneſs for any one to perſiſt in it to the loſs of life; and incredible that ſo many ſhould conſpire in the ſame unreaſonable and unaccountable folly; eſpecially, when the religion which they profeſſed did exclude all liars from all the happineſs and rewards of the next life, which they pretended to be perſuaded of; ſo that, whatſoever thoſe perſons might be otherwiſe, and however they might falſify in other things, there is no reaſon to doubt of their truth and fidelity in this report, becauſe they died for the teſtimony of it. Therefore the higheſt atteſtation of a thing is called martyrdom, and the moſt credible witneſſes, martyrs. And though bare martyrdom be not an argument of the infallible truth of a teſtimony, or of the infallibility of the perſon that gives it; yet it is one of the higheſt arguments that can be of his honeſty and integrity in that thing, and that he believes himſelf, otherwiſe he would not die for it: and it is a good evidence of the general integrity of theſe perſons, as to all other things, that they were ſo conſcientious, as not, for fear of death, to deny that which they believed to be a truth, nor to conceal that which they believed to be of importance.

2*dly*, As to the matter or thing which they atteſted, we may conſider it with theſe advantages.

1. The reſurrection of Chriſt was ſuch a thing, as, in its own nature, they were capable of giving evidence to.

2. We will conſider a little the circumſtances of it, which add much to the credit of it.

3. We will conſider the effects that this relation and report had in the world.

4. The circumſtances of the perſons who entertained the belief of it.

1. Let

1. Let us consider that the resurrection of Christ is such a thing, as in the nature of it they were capable of giving testimony to. Indeed, if it were such a thing as either in the nature of it were absolutely impossible, as if a man should say he had seen or handled a pure spirit; or else such, as these persons could not reasonably be presumed to be competent witnesses of it, as if a man that is altogether ignorant in geometry should say, that he had seen such a man demonstrate a proposition in Euclid; in these cases, though a man be never so credible, yet he is not to be credited. But the resurrection of Christ is no such thing; no man that believes that God can make a living body out of nothing, can think it absolutely impossible to raise a dead body to life; nor was it a thing they could not be presumed to be competent witnesses of: for that which they attest concerning the resurrection of Christ, is that which every man may give evidence in, for it requires nothing but common sense and understanding; as to touch and handle a body, and know that it is a body; to see a man perform the operations of life, to see him walk and eat, and hear him speak: and this they attest of Christ, after he was crucified, dead, and buried; that they saw him several times, and conversed with him; and they could not be mistaken in the person, being so intimately and familiarly acquainted with him in his life-time.

2. We will consider a little the circumstance of his resurrection. He had foretold, in his life-time, that he would rise again the third day. The chief priests and the Pharisees remembered this saying, and therefore, lest his disciples should come by night and steal him away, they make the sepulchre sure, seal the stone, and set a guard of soldiers. The disciples whom they were afraid of, they were scattered with fear; and that it might appear that it was the work of God, there was a great earthquake, which made the guard to tremble; and in their sight an angel appearing in a most glorious manner, rolled away the stone; and when he was risen, and appeared to his disciples, they were terrified, and thought it had been a spirit, till our Saviour bids them see him, and handle him, that he had flesh and bones, which a spirit could not have. He conversed familiarly with them; and, for their greater satisfaction, did eat with them; and, to satisfy the scrupulous unbelief of Thomas, he bids him put his hand into the hole of his side, and see in his hands the print of the nails, to shew that it was the same body that was crucified. Now, the greater their jealousy and unbelief was, the greater is the evidence of the thing; and it shews that it was upon great conviction; and when they could no longer resist the evidence of the thing, that they did believe it: and after all this, they saw him ascend up into heaven, and found the promise of the Spirit made good to them, to furnish them with power and gifts, for carrying on the work of the gospel.

3. We will consider the strange and wonderful effects that this report and relation had in the world. The preaching of Christ crucified, and rising from the dead, had a strange operation upon the world. With such admirable success did this prevail, that, in a few years, the gospel was entertained in a great part of the world. The plain and naked relation of this, by men that were destitute of secular learning and arts, without the help of power, or policy, or any other worldly advantage, did prevail with men to entertain and embrace that profession, against the prejudice of education, the bias of corrupt nature, and the advantages of worldly interests: nor could all the opposition of the great and the wise, the princes and the philosophers of the world, give a check to the prevalency of it. Surely nothing but truth could have wrought those great wonders and effects, naked and unarmed. Those strange and miraculous effects which are matter of fact, and undeniable, one would think, should render it very easy to any man to believe the miracle of Christ's resurrection.

4. We will consider the circumstances of the persons who entertained the belief of it. Many of them were very rational, and serious, and inquisitive persons, who had opportunity to satisfy themselves about the truth of it; and if there had been any reason to disbelieve the testimony that was given, had such great and generous spirits, that, if it had been for their advantage and interest to have believed it, yet out of the greatneſs of their minds, they would not have entertained any ungrounded relation, much leſs a religion built upon it. Such were ſome eminent among the Jews and Heathens for their great learning, and knowledge of philoſophy, and all excellent endowments, who were early converted to Chriſtianity. And as for the multitude who embraced the goſpel, the doctrine of it was ſo contrary to their luſts, and the profeſſion of it to their intereſts, that nothing can be imagined to have perſuaded them to the belief of it, but a high ſatisfaction of the truth of it; and, particularly, of this great miracle of Chriſt's reſurrection, upon which, principally, the goſpel doth rely. And thus I have endeavoured to give you the beſt evidence I could of the truth of this miracle.

I ſhould now proceed to take notice of the objections that may be made againſt it: but this I ſhall reſerve to the following diſcourſe.
